HEALTH CARE PAYOFFS CALLED RIFE BY HYNES AS 26 ARE INDICTED

Nursing-Home Prosecutor Charges Kickbacks by Suppliers—Feels All Medicaid Is Involved

By RICHARD J. MEISLIN

The state's special nursing-home prosecutor said yesterday that he had found a widespread pattern of kickbacks in the health-care industry in New York State, with suppliers paying up to one-third the value of the contract being paid by the suppliers to get the business.

The special prosecutor, Charles J. Hynes, announced the indictments of 26 nursing-home owners, operators, employees and suppliers in connection with such alleged schemes, which he said could involve up to half the 125 nursing homes in the metropolitan New York area.

He said that in dozens of conversations covertly recorded by informants, suppliers of a variety of goods and services—including food, linen and laundry service—had offered to pay monthly kickbacks averaging $500 per supplier per nursing home.

Some Indictment Details

"Our indication is that the same kinds of abuses are found in all provider services in Medicaid," Mr. Hynes said, adding that he included hospitals and pharmacies, which are outside his jurisdiction. More than $3 billion dollars a year is paid by Medicaid for health services in New York State.

Mr. Hynes indicated that additional indictments were expected soon from grand juries hearing evidence about such other aspects of the alleged schemes.

Thirteen nursing-home officials —in most cases, operators or administrators —were charged in yesterday's indictments with conspiracy and with violating the anti-kickback provisions of the state health laws. Eleven suppliers were charged with perjury, and two meat-company owners were accused of bribing a witness, criminal solicitation and conspiracy.

Indictments by 5 Grand Juries

The indictments were returned by five grand juries in Brooklyn, the Bronx, Queens and Nassau and Suffolk Counties.

Mr. Hynes, calling the alleged kickbacks a "ripoff of the state," said he would recommend legislation to change the offense from a misdemeanor, carrying a one-year prison term and a $1,000 fine, to a felony.

Mr. Hynes said that his investigation, which focused on 30 of the metropolitan area's major nursing-home suppliers, had uncovered three major kickback schemes:

¶"Inflated billing," in which the supplier would bill the nursing home for more than the amount actually owed.

¶"Phony billing," in which a false in-

Pledges a Referendum to Seek Independence

By HENRY GINIGER

Special to The New York Times

MONTREAL, Nov. 15—The party that seeks to separate Quebec from Canada was swept into power tonight in this predominantly French-speaking province.

The Quebec Party, in its third bid for power since 1970, captured a majority of National Assembly seats on a wave of protest votes against the ruling Liberal Party of Premier Robert Bourassa. Mr. Bourassa, who failed to hold his own district in Montreal, had appealed for the support of those favoring Canada's federal system against a separatist threat to Canadian unity.

But Mr. Bourassa's appeal was heavily rejected by voters dissatisfied with his six years of rule and willing to take the risk of putting the separatists in power if it meant more efficient and less corrupt government.

Comeback for Conservatives

At 10 P.M., with more than half the votes counted, the Quebec Party appeared to have won 70 of 110 seats, compared to the five it won in 1973. The Liberals were expected to be reduced to 28 from the 102 seats they won in 1973.

The conservative National Union, once the most powerful force in Canada but which was completely shut out in 1973, made a strong comeback at Liberal expense and apparently captured 10 seats.

The new government will be headed by René Levesque, a 54-year-old journal-

CARTER SAYS BURNS VOWS COOPERATION; SEES COMPATIBILITY

HIS TONE SEEMS CONCILIATORY

Georgian Asserts It Is Likely That Reserve Board Head Will Stay in Post—Still Studies Tax Cut

By B. DRUMMOND AYRES Jr.

Special to The New York Times

PLAINS, Ga., Nov. 15—President-elect Jimmy Carter said today that he had received a pledge of cooperation from Arthur F. Burns, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, and felt that they will find a substantial degree of compatibility.

Mr. Carter made the comments in a news conference in which he took what appeared to be a generally conciliatory tone toward Dr. Burns. He said that he "would guess I can work well with Dr. Burns," and that it was "the most likely prospect" that Dr. Burns would stay out his present post until the conclusion of his term in January 1978.

News conference transcript, pages 32-33.

The President-elect's comments came after a flurry last weekend, during which Dr. Burns spoke out in testimony before a Senate committee against the possible inflationary consequences of trying to stimulate the economy through tax cuts or increased Government spending or monetary policy.

No Intention of Retiring

Dr. Burns, who has told friends that he has no intention of retiring, has sought to counter the interpretation that this might portend a clash with Mr. Carter, who has indicated that he might propose a tax cut after taking office in January.

Mr. Carter said, however, that there were differences between him and Dr. Burns, he "would have to decide what to do about" stimulating the economy through tax rebates or budget cuts. And he repeated that he was reluctant on plans that might involve a deficit if the economy needed stimulation when he took office in January.

The Federal Reserve Board reported today that industrial production declined in October for the second consecutive month. The stock market, however, posted a moderate gain. [Page 55.]

At his news conference, Mr. Carter repeated that his aim was to reduce the nation's unemployment rate to about 4 to 4.5 percent and hoped that the nation's growth rate would reach between 5 to 6 percent within four years.

Urges Restraint on Oil Prices

Among other points that Mr. Carter made at the news conference were the following:

¶He urged oil-exporting nations to show "great restraint" and not increase the price of oil at their meeting next month. [Page 36.]

¶He said that his proposals for reorganizing the Government—particularly his welfare and health care proposals—would not be inflationary because the reorganization would eliminate the high cost of bureaucracy.

¶He said that at least a thousand top appointments would be made in the transition from the Ford Administration to the Carter Administration, and that he would personally make the top 75.

¶He appointed Jody Powell, his long-

Syrian Peace Force Takes Control Of Beirut, Halting the Civil War

By JAMES F. CLARITY

Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Nov. 15—The Syrian Army took total control of Beirut today, forcing peace on the battle-ravaged downtown area of the capital and in effect halting a civil war in which at least 35,000 people have been killed in 19 months.

Officially the Syrians were only part of an Arab League peacekeeping force but actually they constitute the overwhelmingly dominant part. They were the only ones who participated significantly in today's occupation operation.

The Syrians met almost no armed resistance as they began advancing toward the center of the city shortly after dawn. Their American-made battle tanks broke through thick earth and sandbag barricades, and their Soviet-made tanks and truckloads of heavily armed infantrymen followed.

Only a Few Shots Are Fired

The Lebanese leftists and Moslems who with their Palestinian allies had been exchanging shellfire with Lebanese right-wing Christians through the night either disappeared or peacefully gave up control of key points on the urban front lines to the advancing Syrians.

A few fusillades of machine-gun fire and several mortar shells were aimed at the advancing troops, who returned the fire. But no casualties were reported among either the Syrians or the retreating militia forces as a result of the exchanges of fire.

One Syrian soldier was killed when one of his grenades exploded accidentally. Three Lebanese civilians stepped on mines in the streets and one of them reportedly died.

Advancing Troops Welcomed

The advancing troops were welcomed cautiously by most of the people they encountered, whether Moslem or Christian. Children gave some tank crews poinsettias and bougainvillea to decorate their cannons and a few Moslem women expressed their satisfaction through ululation—giving the wavering cries of joy that Arabic women issue at weddings and other joyous events.

"I know it is all over," said one Moslem resident of the capital who has been shot at and whose car was damaged in shelling during the war. "But I still can't believe it. Nobody believes it is really over. It is like a dream."

Several hundred Sudanese and Libyan troops of a token peacekeeping force that has been here since June but has been

APPEALS COURT VOIDS STEINGUT INDICTMENT

States Manhattan Has Jurisdiction in Case of Speaker and Son

By MAX H. SEIGEL

The Appellate Division of State Supreme Court in Brooklyn yesterday threw out an indictment of Assembly Speaker Stanley Steingut and his son, Robert, a City Councilman, on charges of "corrupt use of position" in offering a job in return for a campaign contribution.

The five justices held unanimously that the Kings County grand jury that had returned the indictment lacked jurisdiction. It thus supported the contention of the two Steinguts that no action against them should have been taken in Brooklyn because if the alleged misconduct occurred at all—which they denied—it had occurred in Manhattan.

Eugene Gold, the Brooklyn District Attorney, whose office obtained the indictments, said yesterday that he was taking steps to appeal.

"We note that the only issue decided by the court is jurisdiction," he said, "and this decision does not treat the merits of the case."

In Manhattan, District Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau said he could not tell now whether his office would look into the alleged misconduct.

"I understand District Attorney Gold is taking an appeal," he said, "and we'll

By ROBERT REINHOLD

The relatively low turnout in the Presidential election appears to reflect demographic factors, as well as a sense of powerlessness among the less privileged and the young, rather than active disillusionment with the American system or institutions of government, according to a survey conducted by The New York Times and CBS News.

The survey, which compared the attitudes and backgrounds of voters with those of nonvoters, found that voters were just as disaffected as those who stayed at home on Election Day.

The poll tends to run counter to pre-election theories that widespread, and apparently very real, loss of trust in government after Watergate and other scandals involving abuse of authority would be translated into a massive refusal to vote. For example, 55 percent of the nonvoters felt that public officials did not care about people like them; 55 percent of voters said the same thing.

As in past elections, the nonvoters were concentrated heavily among people under 30 years old and the poor, the less-well educated and blue-collar workers.

While those who failed to vote were no more likely than voters to be "alienated" from the political system in an active hostile sense, they did differ markedly in that they tended to feel remote from government, to feel powerless and politically impotent. The survey detected in them a sense that their voices were inconsequential and therefore not worth hearing, that things would go on much the same with or without their votes.

The Times/CBS survey, in which 2,042 citizens over 18 years old were interviewed by telephone in all parts of the country from Nov. 4 to 8, also found:

¶Six of every 10 of the voters who made up their minds in the last few days before the election voted for Mr. Carter.

¶The outcome of the Presidential race would probably not have been altered had all 146 million Americans who are over 18 and eligible to vote gone to the polls, and, in fact, Jimmy Carter's popular margin over President Ford would probably have been much greater.

¶Mr. Carter was the heavy favorite among nonvoters, by a margin of 52 percent to 35 percent. With full voter participation, Mr. Carter would probably have won by about 53 to 45, rather than 51 to 48, if the remaining undecided were located equally between the two men. It was impossible from the survey to tell the electoral-vote count, which depends on the vote in each state, would have

Car Insurance Rates Found Burdening Some Groups

By FRANCES CERRA

A growing body of evidence suggests that the system used to determine automobile insurance rates is based, in part, on faulty statistics and unfairly burdens groups of drivers who can least afford to pay the highest premiums.

Under the system, young male drivers and residents of New York City pay much more for their auto insurance than people over 30 years old and residents of rural areas upstate, respectively. Although premiums have increased substantially for all drivers in the last year, the increases threaten to price—and may already have priced—auto insurance out of the reach of the young and the disadvantaged.

One aspect of the industry rating system will be explored today at a hearing on a proposed 59.5 percent increase in assigned-risk liability premiums that would apply to residents of New York City. The current unwillingness of insurance companies to take new business voluntarily is forcing increasing numbers of drivers into the assigned-risk pool.

Industry representatives maintain that the rate structure is grounded on hard statistical evidence that certain groups are more likely to be involved in accidents, and that good drivers are therefore not forced to subsidize bad ones.

But a study released last June by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners suggested otherwise. The study separated accident data, for the first time, into geographic regions and into urban, suburban and rural categories. It found, among other things, that the big difference between premiums paid by young drivers living in urban areas and those paid by older drivers in the same areas was not justified.

In New York City, the study said, the difference should be cut in half. It also raised doubts about the premise that people who drive to work are more likely to be involved in accidents than those who use their cars for only pleasure.

A review of the classification system used by the industry to rate drivers is

Waldheim Faces a New Contender From Third World in Election Bid

By PETER GROSE
Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Nov. 15—Another third-world diplomat threw his name into consideration for the post of secretary general today, threatening the chances of the incumbent, Kurt Waldheim of Austria, for election to a second five-year term.

In a cautiously worded statement, Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe of Sri Lanka, president of this year's General Assembly, declared his willingness to serve in the United Nations' top executive post, but only if he should emerge as the unanimous choice of the Security Council.

The Council is expected to meet in secret session early next month to decide on its recommendation for routine General Assembly approval.

So far, the names of Mr. Waldheim and Lui sEcheverri Alvarez, the outgoing President of Mexico, are before the Council. In his statement, reinforced by a personal telephone call to Mr. Waldheim, the 63-year-old Mr. Amerasinghe specifically ruled out competing for votes and presented himself for consideration only should the Council be deadlocked between declared candidates.

Victor Lusinchi
Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe

'An Elegant Ploy'

A diplomat experienced in the delicate maneuvering that marks elections of the Secretary General interpreted this studied reluctance as "an elegant ploy" to gain consideration without risking the possibility of rejection.

For months, Mr. Waldheim has been the clear favorite to succeed himself; if the Council met today, diplomats believe he could secure 14 out of the 15 votes. The one dissenter would probably be China, a permanent member whose negative vote would count as a veto.

Though they have often spoken warmly of Mr. Waldheim's performance in office, Chinese diplomats have never committed themselves to support his re-election. On the contrary, they have regularly said they would prefer a candidate from the third world.

Now there are two such contenders—even if not formally declared candidates—and their presence raises the question whether a European should hold the top post in an organization dominated by the third world.

In High Regard at U.N.

Of the two, Mr. Amerasinghe seems a far more formidable opponent.

Mr. Echeverria has little personal following at the United Nations and is known primarily as a leading champion of a "new economic order" to benefit the developing countries, a stand that has not endeared him to the United States and the other industrialized nations.

Mr. Amerasinghe, by contrast, has built up a long and impressive reputation as a parliamentary mediator. As permanent representative of Sri Lanka, formerly Ceylon, he has served at the United Nations for 10 years, and gained wide stature as president and taskmaster of the unwieldy Law of the Sea Conference.

Mr. Waldheim enjoys the more or less open support of four of the five permanent members of the Security Council—the United States, Soviet Union, Britain and France. He has won high regard for his five years in the delicate role of Secretary General.

He also has the public support of the Organization of African Unity, whose members seem ready to endorse him for a second term in preparation for presenting an African candidate for the office five years hence.

With this widely based support, many diplomats believe it may have been a tactical error last month for Mr. Waldheim to have publicly announced his availability for re-election, instead of waiting to be approached by a nearly unanimous Security Council and asked to remain in office.

Mild Earthquake Strikes Peking; Most Stay Home After First Scare

PEKING, Nov. 15 (Reuters)—An earthquake struck this city today, sending thousands of people fleeing into the streets. There was no immediate sign of damage or casualties.

For 20 seconds buildings swayed, windows rattled and cracks opened and closed in high-rise apartment buildings. One hour after the tremor most residents had returned to their homes. There was no official statement on the quake, which occurred at 9:55 P.M. (8:55 A.M. Monday, New York time)

[In Washington, the Geological Survey said the tremor measured 6.5 on the open-ended Richter scale and was centered in the same general area as the destructive earthquake of last July.]

Today tremor was milder than the July earthquake, which registered 8.2 on the Richter scale and was centered on the coal and steel center of Tangshan, 100 miles east of Peking. More than 100,000 people are believed to have been killed at that time.

Foreigners Seek Refuge in Embassies

Foreigners living in high-rise apartment buildings had the worst scare today. Some residents were nearly hysterical as they described their ordeal. Many families prepared to spend the night in their embassies.

The British Ambassador, Edward Youde, and his staff made sleeping arrangements for the 100-odd British residents here. Diplomats got in touch with visiting businessmen and reported all were well.

"Last time the earthquake produced a terrifying heaving, grunting sound," one foreigner said. "This time it was a silent, heavy shudder."

In the eastern part of Peking, some Chinese took their bedclothes and most valuable possessions and moved back into the mud-walled shelters they built on the pavements last July. Makeshift tents were erected in a few alleys and small knots of people huddled together on street corners, stamping their feet to ward off the cold. But most of the city's six million residents remained indoors.

Tremors Reported in Iran

TEHERAN, Iran, Nov. 15 (UPI)—A moderate earthquake struck the Khorramabad area of southwestern Iran today and new tremors were reported from Khorassan Province in the northeast, where 17 persons were gilled earlier this month.

Friendlier Relations With the Russians Rejected by Chinese

PEKING, Nov. 15 (Reuters)—China tonight flatly rejected any return to friendly relations with the Soviet Union following the death of Mao Tse-tung.

The rejection came in a tough speech by Deputy Premier Li Hsien-nien that had earlier provoked a walkout by the Soviet Ambassador, Vasily S. Tolstikov, and diplomats from seven other pro-Moscow countries. Mr. Li was speaking at a banquet at Peking's Great Hall of the People.

In a clear reference to recent Soviet statements on China, Mr. Li said that the Russians "kept creating false impressions of relaxation of relations." He dismissed this as wishful thinking and day-dreaming.

Mr. Li, who was speaking at a banquet for President Jean-Bedel Bokassa of the Central African Republic, said that China would carry out unswervingly the foreign policies laid down by Chairman Mao Tse-tung, who died in September.

The Soviet bloc ambassadors had earlier walked out of the banquet in protest at other remarks by Mr. Li.

Without mentioning the Soviet Union by name, the Deputy Premier referred to it as a "paper tiger" whose criminal actions had aroused the condemnation of the African countries.

Although China marked the 59th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution last week by sending a conciliatory message of greeting to Moscow, it has kept up its verbal attacks on the Soviet Union. A day after the message went to the Kremlin, Hsinhua, the Chinese press agency, denounced Moscow's claim that the Communist bloc was a voluntary union of sovereign states.

The agency said in a commentary that there were nearly one million Soviet troops in Eastern Europe, and added: "It is essentially a colonial empire with the Soviet Union as its suzerain state."

An editorial in Jenmin Jih Pao welcoming President Bokassa to China contained the customary attack on the Soviet Union's Africa policy. It said that the Kremlin had engaged in aggression, expansion and intrigue to sabotage the liberation movements of southern Africa.

RIGHTS GROUP COMPLETES ARGENTINE INVESTIGATION

Special to The New York Times

BUENOS AIRES, Nov. 15—An investigating team from Amnesty International today completed a 10-day inquiry into human rights violations in Argentina in preparation for a major report.

While the three-member team conducted interviews, visited jails and gathered other material for its report, more than 75 guerrilla suspects were killed, a fireman was killed and 10 persons injured by a bomb at the La Plata police headquarters, and two business executives were assassinated.

"We deeply regret the appalling outrages which are still being committed by terrorists in Argentina and express our sincere sympathy with the relatives of the victims," the Amnesty International team said in a statement on leaving.

The officially oriented press here had accused the group of being indifferent toward the violence of left-wing extremists.

A United States Representative who is a member of the team, the Rev. Robert F. Drinan, Democrat of Massachusetts, said reports from relatives of hundreds of persons who had disappeared indicated that there had been a breakdown of legal guarantees in Argentina.

Father Drinan, a Roman Catholic priest, said he felt that President Jorge Rafael Videla, who heads the military junta, was trying to do the best he could, but the mission had been unable to obtain any detailed information from officials on persons who had been killed or who had disappeared or were under arrest.

The investigating team was completed by Lord Avesbury, a member of the British House of Lords, and Patricia Feeney, a member of the London headquarter staff of Amnesty International.

The Syrians' goal was seen as keeping the leftists, who had seemed on the verge of victory in the spring, from establishing a regime that might draw Syria into an unwanted war with Israel.

The Syrian-imposed peace in Lebanon, with the sponsorship of the Arab League countries that approved the purported multinational Arab peacekeeping force, is likely to last at least a year, possibly longer, in the view of many Arab and Western analysts.

The Syrians have also weakened the Palestine Liberation Organization in Lebanon and are now able to control its activities more carefully. This was another aim of the intervention.

The next planned phase of the Syrian occupation of Lebanon, also approved by the Arab League nations in meetings last month in Saudi Arabia and Egypt, is the establishment of control of the national highways from Beirut north to Tripoli and the Syrian border and south to Saida and Tyre. The Syrian occupation force is expected to stop well short of Lebanon's border with Israel, where penetration of troops from Damascus could stir conflict that neither Syria nor Israel seems to want.

The Syrians must also deal with the occupation of several towns in the area of the Israeli border by Lebanese Christian forces that captured the towns with Israeli assistance.

The Syrian force is nominally under the command of Lebanon's President, Elias Sarkis, who was elected in May with strong Syrian support. While Mr. Sarkis has emphasized that he has the right to ask the Syrians to leave the country, he is expected in the weeks ahead to devote his energy to nonmilitary work.

…ADE, Yugoslavia, Nov. 15 — …hose who would compare Soviet… relations with those of "the Little Red Ridinghood," Leonid …ev arrived here today for three …alks with President Tito.

…ezhnev's fairy-tale reference was … toast he delivered at a dinner … the Yugoslav leader. Alluding …nents made during the recent … election campaign, Mr. Brezh… … it had become fashionable in … to cast shadows on Soviet-… relations.

"Authors of such fairy tales try to present Yugoslavia as a helpless Little Red Ridinghood, whom the terrible and bloodthirsty wolf—the aggressive Soviet Union—is preparing to dismember and devour," Mr. Brezhnev said.

Mr. Brezhnev added that he could not say which was more at the root of such statements—"a complete misunderstanding of the principles on which socialist countries build their relations or the cynical belief that the public will swallow any lie if it is repeated frequently enough." He went on to reiterate pledges to honor Yugoslav sovereignty.

President Tito, in a toast, spoke of relations based on "independence, sovereignty, equality, noninterference and respect for the different paths of internal development and peculiarities of the international positions of our countries and parties."

He decried the "intensified international arms race," calling for urgent action toward complete disarmament, to be instituted under United Nations auspices. Earlier, he conferred on Mr. Brezhnev the Order of Freedom, one of Yugoslavia's highest decorations. The medal was awarded in recognition of the Soviet leader's wartime service against the common enemy, and of his 70th birthday next Friday.

Israelis Question Sincerity of New Moves by Arabs

By WILLIAM E. FARRELL
Special to The New York Times

JERUSALEM, Nov. 15—Israeli Government officials are reluctantly conceding the effectiveness of a recent series of Arab diplomatic and political moves in the complex search for peace in the Middle East.

At the same time, these officials are labeling the Arab moves as skillful propaganda maneuvers rather than as sincere and purposeful efforts to end the state of belligerency between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

At the risk of once again being labeled intransigent by the international community, Israel is sticking to its posture of making no major concessions regarding occupation of Arab territories for anything but solid guarantees of an end of the protracted state of war.

Hints of a Softening by P.L.O.

The most recent Arab move aimed at building up international support for its position, in the Israeli view, involves a proliferation of reports that the Palestine Liberation Organization has softened its anti-Israeli stand.

Some of these reports have come from prominent Israelis, who are, however, not in public office. Foreign Ministry officials dismiss the reports as nothing more than another propaganda move in the recent Arab effort to create a new climate that would favor them in the event of new negotiations on the Middle East.

"The P.L.O. reports are parcel to an upsurge of reports which are part of preparing grounds for a political initiative vis-a-vis Israel," a Foreign Ministry analyst said. Another official said, in dismissing the reports, that there was "no outward sign of change" in the posture of the overall Palestinian organization toward Israel.

"Terrorist groups are still organized on the West Bank," the official went on. "P.L.O. leader Yasir Arafat has not renounced terrorist tactics and the Palestinian covenant has not been amended to delete the P.L.O. contention that the Jews have no right to a state of their own."

'Losing Points,' an Israeli Says

The Arab moves on the diplomatic and political fronts, particularly since the recent conference at Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, where the elements of a Lebanese ceasefire were worked out, are causing officials here concern. "We're losing points," an Israeli official said. Referring to recent Arab diplomatic efforts, he added: "For the first time in 28 years they're doing it properly."

Several officials pointed to a number of events, spurred from the Arab world, that have put Israel "in the business of reacting," as an Israeli phrased it. First there was the United Nations Security Council declaration last week in which Israel was criticized for its administration of the Arab territories it has occupied since the 1967 war. The Security Council hearings were held at the request of Egypt.

There were anger and dismay here that the United States joined in the declaration, which expressed "grave anxiety and dismay over the present serious situation in the occupied territories as a result of continued Israeli occupation."

Another Arab move was initiated by President Anwar el-Sadat of Egypt, who informed a delegation of visiting United States Congressmen that he was willing to go to a Geneva conference on the Middle East with no preconditions and with an open agenda.

More Than 'a Piece of Paper'

The Congressmen, who included Israel on their itinerary, were later told by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin that Mr. Sadat's remarks had been scrutinized with care and that Israel needed "a peace that is more than merely a piece of paper."

"Israel," Mr. Rabin said, "is ready for immediate dialogue with Egypt if President Sadat is truly interested in a peace agreement with Israel."

Some Foreign Ministry officials commented that Mr. Sadat had not said anything new, and that what was shaping up in these and other moves was "a cooperative political effort among Arab nations against Israel."

"There are well-lubricated diplomatic channels that could be used" for the purpose of making overtures to the peace table, one official said, instead of making conduits of American politicians who are not necessarily versed in the nuances of Middle Eastern foreign policy.

He added that he knew of no new Arab initiatives being made through these channels. The official said that Israel was at the moment in a diplomatic position of responding, and could do little initiating except to reiterate its previous conditions for any conference with the Arabs.

These include a resumption of Geneva talks with the participants that originated the talks in December of 1973—Israel, the Arabs, the United States and the Soviet Union—thus excluding—the Palestine Liberation Organization and a requirement that the talks be aimed "at the end of the state of war."

An "end of the state of war" was less than a "full peace," one official said, adding: "For less than full peace, we're prepared for less territorial concessions."

Quebec Separatists Win by Big Margin, Ousting the Liberal Premier

ist and former Liberal minister, who won his first seat in the Quebec Parliament in a district across the St. Lawrence River from Montreal.

Mr. Levesque is expected to begin negotiations with the federal Government in Ottawa for a gradual transfer of sovereignty to Quebec. He has promised that his government would make no unilateral move toward independence until a referendum was held and he had obtained a popular mandate to do so.

The prevailing opinion at the moment appears to be against independence, but the separatist victory today was expected to introduce a period of uncertainty into Quebec's political and economic life as well as to cast greater doubt that at any time in the recent past on the future of the Canadian federation.

Difficulties Seen for Trudeau

At the national level, Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau was expected to have increased difficulty in maintaining office.

He had already courted unpopularity with the English majority in Canada with a policy of enforcing bilingualism as a way of getting uebec's French-speaking majority more weight within the Canadian federation.

The election in Quebec of a party hostile to this federation has deeply undercut Mr. Trudeau's policy and further weakened his own political position and that of the National Liberal Party.

After six years in power, Mr. Bourassa, a 43-year-old lawyer, discovered that his majority had fallen apart and that most voters, according to the polls taken after he called the election, were dissatisfied with his record.

He had to take much of the blame for a sluggish economy and for high unemployment and inflation. He was also held accountable for a record budget deficit, labor unrest that interfered with public services, widespread charges of corruption against his party and a policy that attempted to defend French as the preeminent language of the province but which seemed to English speakers to be a restriction of their liberty.

Because majority sentiment in the province still seems to be against independence, Mr. Bourassa seized upon this to make the campaign one of a choice between federalism and independence.

Bourassa Viewed as Liability

He in effect asked voters to forget their grievances against the government in the interest of keeping Canada together. But Liberal candidates running in districts with heavy proportions of English-speaking or immigrant votes, found Mr. Bourassa such a liability to their chances that they publicly apologized for him and hinted broadly that his leadership would be contested within the party whatever the electoral result.

The Quebec Party, also aware that public opinion was against independence, played down this issue and concentrated its campaign on the Liberal record.

Mr. Levesque proposed better government and promised no unilateral move toward independence until the population had been consulted. However, the Quebec Party expects that in negotiations with the federal Government Ottawa will refuse at one point or another to yield on such matters as power over defense, foreign affairs and currency, and that consequently the Quebec government will then have to call for a mandate to pursue independence in other ways.

Mr. Levesque's strategy of playing down the independence issue seems, for the moment, to have worked.

There was resentment among many voters against the Liberal attempt to make them prisoners of a dilemma in which their only hope of escaping Quebec's separation was to return to office a Government they did not like.

Thousands of voters rejected this choice by either voting for the National Union candidates or by voting for the Quebec Party on the ground that its independence program would not constitute a clear and present danger.

As a separatist victory became a stronger possibility, fear began to spread among those with wealth and economic power. This is expected to increase now that the Quebec Party has won.

During the campaign, banks reported the transfer of millions of dollars to neighboring Ontario and some members of the English-speaking community where so much of the economic power is concentrated, talked of transferring their homes and operations elsewhere.

Quebec Province at a Glance

Quebec, one of the 10 federated provinces of Canada, is the largest in area, with 523,900 square miles, or a seventh of the country's land mass. With somewhat over six million inhabitants, it is second only to Ontario in population and constitutes more than a quarter of the national total.

The most distinctive of the provinces, Quebec is dominated by people of French origin, who use French as their mother tongue. Of the 20 percent who are not of French background, 13 to 14 percent are English-speaking and the rest consist of immigrant groups, principally from Europe.

History—Quebec is sometimes called the cradle of Canada. In 1534 Jacques Cartier, the French explorer, planted a cross on the Gaspé Peninsula and the following year sailed up the St. Lawrence River. In 1608 Samuel de Champlain founded Quebec City as the nucleus of what was called New France. The battle between the British and the French on the Plains of Abraham, near there, resulted in British control over Canada. To retain the province's loyalty in the war with the American Colonies, Britain allowed the French language and customs to remain in use.

Economy—Quebec, source of almost a fourth of the gross national product, is one of the wealthiest provinces in natural resources, the major exception being petroleum, which it must import. It has the most abundant water power in Canada, is fourth in mineral production and has rich asbestos and forest reserves. Nonetheless, Quebec has consistently lagged behind Ontario in manufacturing industries, which Quebecers attribute to favoritism by Ottawa. Greater Montreal, a principal industrial and tourist center, has more than three million people, or more than half the province's population.

Government—As do the other provinces, Quebec has a parliamentary form of government on the British model, with the capital in Quebec City. The National Assembly is overwhelmingly controlled by the Liberal Party, the provincial but completely independent counterpart of the national Liberal Party, which controls the Cabinet in Ottawa. The party is dedicated to keeping Quebec part of Canada, although with augmented powers over local affairs.

Brazilians Vote in Local Elections That Will Test the Popularity of the Military Regime

By JONATHAN KANDELL
Special to The New York Times

RIO DE JANEIRO, Nov. 15—Brazilians voted today in municipal elections that are widely viewed here as another step in the slow process of political liberalization promised by the right-wing military dictatorship.

The final results of the voting for aldermen and mayors in Brazil's 3,789 municipalities will not be available for several days.

The election will not change the balance of political power. The country is in the firm grasp of the military and its allies. The President, Gen. Ernesto Geisel, exercises far more power than Congress and can intervene in any municipality.

But because Brazil has lived through 12 years of dictatorship and long periods of press censorship, any election is viewed as a plebiscite on the military regime.

The pro-Government party, the Alliance for National Renewal, has several strong advantages.

It is assured of winning in 1,789 municipalities—almost half the towns and cities—where the opposition party, the Brazilian Democratic Movement, has no party structure and is not fielding candidates.

The military regime also appoints pro-Government mayors in state capitals, towns classified as important to national defense, and—for reasons clear to nobody—in vacation spas.

Several campaign restrictions have been enforced to the decided advantage of the Alliance for National Renewal. Although both parties were not supposed to begin campaigning until a month before the elections, President Geisel has been making appearances alongside Alliance politicians for almost a year.

Regime's Achievements Extolled

Both parties were prohibited from using radio or television for campaigning. On the air, candidates were limited to giving their names, party affiliations, a brief summary of their backgrounds and the time and place where polls would be open.

The measure may have aided pro-Government candidates because of President Geisel's high visibility on radio and television. The Government has also used the broadcast media to extol its achievements in education, oil exploration, and hydroelectric and steel projects. The propaganda always ends with the same slogan: "This is a country that is going forward."

For months before the election, the Government attempted to discourage the opposition from making a frontal assault on the revolution proclaimed by the military or on the constitutionality of the regime.

In the last year, President Geisel has dismissed five opposition legislators and stripped them of their political rights for 10 years because remarks they made were considered too critical of the Government.

The opposition has also been shaken by sporadic terrorist bombings by ultra-rightists—believed to be linked with police elements—against lawyers' groups and journalists' associations critical of the Government.

The opposition has conducted a low-key campaign emphasizing an inflation of about 50 percent this year and other economic uncertainties brought about by the steep rise in international oil prices and the recent world recession.

"We would rather not press too hard in the municipal contests so as not to jeopardize the congressional election in 1978, which is a lot more important," said a leading opposition member.

adrid Is Confident Deputies Will Approve Plan to Change Parliament

By JAMES M. MARKHAM
Special to The New York Times

DRID, Nov. 15—Spain's largely one-right-wing Parliament, which Generalissimo Francisco Franco given little to do, steps to center this week and, in its most consequential hour, votes on a political reform hat is also its own death warrant, drid's hustling, somewhat self-conscious press is doing its best to invest ote with high drama. But politicians is probable that the necessary two-s of the 561 deputies in Parliament vote yes on the plan leading to elec-next spring.

The Government of Prime Minister Adolofo Suárez is so confident that it has already begun to tape advertising spots for the popular referendum it plans to hold on the bill in a month. The bill would lay the legal ground for a two-chamber, democratically elected Parliament.

Still, Mr. Suárez is taking no chances and has been busy lobbying in Parliament and perhaps reminding some its members of the cushy sinecures they could lose if they voted against the proposal.

Police bodyguards have been assigned to a number of prominent Communist, Socialist and right-wing personalities to cut down the chances that an assassin's bullet could disrupt the deliberations in the Parliament that are scheduled to begin tomorrow afternoon.

The deputies are being given little time to commit "hari-kiri," as José María Gil Robles, a durable Christian Democrat, put it. The vote on the bill may come by Thursday, and dedicated Francoites will have only a few hours to argue about the perils of "inorganic democracy."

Franco died one year ago Saturday. The Government wants to make sure that the vote comes before Saturday, when the right-wing National Veterans Confederation hopes to bring thousands into Madrid's Plaza de Oriente to pray for his soul. Franco used to address his supporters in the plaza.

The Government has given the civil-war veterans permission to hold the rally, provided it lasts only 20 minutes and is confined to prayers, the reading of Franco's purported last message to the people and the singing of the national anthem. King Juan Carlos is expected to attend a mas at the Valley of the Fallen, outside Madrid.

After Parliament votes and assuming the Government wins, Mr. Suárez is expected to turn to the opposition to negotiate the terms of the elections: what kind of electoral laws will apply, who will have access to radio and television and on what terms, who can hold political rallies and so on.

French Premier Returns to Paris After Talks With Egypt's Leaders

CAIRO, Nov. 15 (Reuters) — Prime Minister Raymond Barre of France flew home today after a four-day visit to Cairo that ended with an affirmation of French and Egyptian support for a just and durable peace settlement in the Middle East.

Mr. Barre's talks with President Anwar el-Sadat and Prime Minister Mamdouh Salem also covered the situation in Lebanon and French assistance in development projects including a subway system in Cairo, a tunnel under the Suez Canal and an Egyptian armaments industry.

The communiqué signed by Mr. Barre and Mr. Salem said a peace settlement should be based on Israel's evacuation of all territories occupied since 1967 and on the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination. It should also be based on the right of all states in the area to live in peace within secure, recognized and guaranteed borders, it said.

Parliament Expels Indian in Exile

NEW DELHI, Nov. 15 (AP)—Subramaniam Swamy, a right-wing opposition leader who has fled abroad, was expelled from the Indian Parliament today on charges of misconduct and subversive activity. In the first such action in 29 years of independence, the upper house adopted a motion ousting the former Harvard economics lecturer on charges of evading the law, propagandizing against India and traveling on an impounded passport.

Trade Bloc Rejects Comecon Plan

BRUSSELS, Nov. 15 (UPI)—The European Economic Community today rejected a proposal for full-scale trade links with the Eastern European economic bloc, Comecon.

The nine-nation Common Market's foreign ministers holding a regular meeting here, called instead for a continuation of trade links with individual Communist countries.

The decision came in reply to a Comecon proposal of Feb. 16 suggesting that each side offer most-favored-nation treatment to the other and that broad-scale economic cooperation be established.

The decision reflected the privately expressed view here that the Kremlin-dominated Comecon could not be likened to the Common Market and was not an appropriate trade partner. Unlike Comecon, the Common Market has an Executive Commission that can act in trade negotiations in behalf of the member countries.

The feeling in Brussels is that the individual Eastern European countries that, with Cuba and Mongolia, make up Comecon's membership, do not have a full and independent voice.

In a communiqué the ministers offered to draw up a "framework agreement" to define relations between the two organizations.

Israeli Army Summons Reservists

TEL AVIV, Nov. 15 (UPI)—The Israeli armed forces began an 18-hour callup exercise today, summoning thousands of reservists to meeting places throughout Israel. Radio and television announcers began the noon news broadcast by reading two-word code phrases designating particular units being called up. Army spokesmen would not reveal the exact number of men summoned during the day-long exercise, but an army source said it was "at least several thousand."

Greeks Are Urged to Abandon Political Favoritism, but They Don't Believe That Reform Will Work

By STEVEN V. ROBERTS
Special to The New York Times

ATHENS, Nov. 15 — Prime Minister Constantine Caramanlis urged his Cabinet ministers recently to eradicate personal favoritism from government. This curse, he said, undermines efficiency at a time when Greece must modernize its methods in order to compete against the more advanced countries of Western Europe.

His remarks were greeted with public approval and private derision. Asking Greeks to give up what they call rousfeti is like asking them to give up retsina, their national wine flavored with pine resin. It was noted that the Prime Minister had appointed his brother as one of his chief aides.

Defendants of favoritism maintain that all countries have patronage. In the face of the monstrous Greek bureaucracy, they say, personal intervention can be the quickest—and sometimes the only—method of getting something done.

To its critics favoritism dominates and distorts the process of government. Decisions are made almost entirely to promote personal or party interests. The luckiest Greeks have "an uncle in Koroni," an allusion to the former location of the gendarmerie's headquarters.

Sotiris Papapolitis, a member of Parliament and a former professor of politics, said that the system of favoritism developed during the 400 years of Turkish rule, when Greeks could never trust the Government to rule fairly or efficiently. Indeed, the word rousfeti comes from an Arabic word adapted by the Turks, conveying the Oriental flavor of many Greek customs.

Moreover, Mr. Papapolitis noted, after independence was won in 1930 by Greece, which has always had a highly patriarchal society, the state became the principal "father figure"—the main provider of jobs and security. Naturally, he added, people sought to curry favor with legislators and other notables who could influence the state machinery, and to offer votes in exchange.

Foreigners are hardly immune. A European diplomat was called by a shipowner who wanted a visa for his niece. When the diplomat asked if she had applied through proper channels, the shipowner was startled; the family had not thought of that.

The main problem is that the bureaucracy is crammed with incompetents who multiply inefficiency. Paying for a parking ticket in Athens requires at least 11 stops on four floors of police headquarters. A journalist recently waited four hours in a government office to discuss a tax problem. When he called the minister in a rage, the matter was settled in 10 minutes, so the next time he will go direct to the top.

Those who lack connections feel frustrated, and many leave the country. As Mr. Papapolitis noted, "Many Greeks find their full potential only when they go abroad." On the other hand, he commented, "you would have a revolt on your hands" without the system since people would feel too insecure.

In other words, you cannot get rid of rousfeti unless you improve the bureaucracy, but you cannot improve the bureaucracy unless you get rid of rousfeti. Until this is resolved, Greeks will continue to depend on their uncles in Koroni.

in Paris as meetings that are due to continue. He was stinging in his attack on the Ford Administration, but his emphasis on the possibilities of progress appeared to suggest that Hanoi hoped for better relations with the incoming Democratic administration.

The United States stand was attacked bitterly in the Council by a dozen supporters of Vietnam. It is expected that they will now ask the General Assembly to take up the matter with the idea of winning approval for a resolution asking the Council to reconsider the application.

The United Nations Charter requires the approval of the Security Council approval for any new membership.

The decision to press for a vote was made by the 11 countries, including France and Sweden, that had jointly sponsored the membership application. They were said to have decided to act speedily after Vietnamese representatives told their third-world supporters earlier in the day that they wanted a decision.

Earlier, diplomats here had thought that the Council discussions would move along slowly, waiting for developments from talks in Paris between American and Vietnamese diplomats, who met last Friday to begin exploring the possibility of establishing diplomatic relations.

When the diplomats adjourned without setting a date for the next meeting, the Vietnamese and their supporters apparently felt it was to their advantage to wait no longer.

Backers of Vietnam have made it no secret that they regard the vote as a means of underscoring the isolation of the United States on the issue of Vietnamese membership in the United Nations. The United States stood alone in 1975 when it used its veto to block the admission of North Vietnam and South Vietnam. The two Vietnams were not formally unified until July of this year.

In preventing the admission of the two Vietnams, the United States argued that the applications should not be acted upon while the Council members were at the same time declining to consider the long-standing application of South Korea.

This year, the South Korean campaign was not pursued by the United States. Instead, this country based its position on the issue of the missing American servicemen.

When the Vietnamese request for admission came up again in September, the Ford Administration announced that the United States would continue to use its veto until there was an accounting given on the missing Americans.

At the time, the Vietnamese accused the United States of twisting the membership question into an election-campaign issue and of using the issue of the missing Americans for domestic political purposes.

However, shortly before the Council was to act—with the American veto a certainty—an agreement was reached to postpone the decision until after the November election.

The Vietnamese apparently acquiesced in the hope that their application would be approved once the election was out of the way. The Ford Administration continued to insist that no commitment had been made. In his campaign speeches, Jimmy Carter also said that Hanoi should be blocked from the United Nations until it provided satisfactory data on the Americans unaccounted for.

Supreme Court Refuses to Review Ruling on Concorde Flights to U.S.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15 (AP)—The Supreme Court refused today to review the circumstances of the Government's decision allowing commercial flights of the British-French supersonic jet Concorde to the United States.

The Justices let stand a decision by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia that Secretary of Transportation William T. Coleman Jr. had acted within his authority in permitting the Concorde to operate on a trial basis at two airports in this country.

The authorities in Fairfax County, Va., and Nassau County, N.Y., seeking to stop the Concorde flights, had asked the high court to review the circumstances of Mr. Coleman's decision.

Last February, Mr. Coleman gave permission to British Airways and Air France to fly the Concorde, the world's fastest passenger plane, which crosses the Atlantic at twice the speed of sound, into Dulles International Airport in Virginia and John F. Kennedy International Airport in New York.

A 16-Month Trial Period

He said that his department would allow limited commercial flights from London and Paris for a 16-month trial period, during which noise levels and environmental effects would be monitored.

New York opponents of the decision thwarted the plane's landing there when the Board of Commissioners of the Port Authority of New York, operator of JFK Airport, prohibited such flights pending study of the effects felt by Dulles. British Airways has filed suit in a Federal court in New York challenging the board's action.

Limited Concorde service has been available at Dulles since May 24, cutting by 3½ hours the flying time between Dulles and Europe.

In seeking a review by the Supreme Court, Fairfax and Nassau counties contended that Mr. Coleman permitted the supersonic transport flights before adopting noise regulations for the aircraft as ordered by Congress in the Noise Control Act of 1972.

Concorde opponents also said that evidence suggested that Mr. Coleman's decision to permit the commercial flights had been influenced by pressure from the White House under President Nixon, a factor that was not discussed in Mr. Coleman's 61-page order.

In opposing the appeal, Government attorneys argued that Mr. Coleman was free to authorize the flights despite the lack of general noise standards. They also said that while certain evidence demonstrated that the Concorde flights were "an issue of political sensitivity," Mr. Coleman had not acted in bad faith.

The Concorde, built jointly by the Governments of England and France and by private industry in both countries, cost $3 billion to develop. The plane, which carries up to 100 passengers, can attain a cruising speed of 1,300 miles an hour.

Lisbon Explosion Damages Home Of Former Agriculture Minister

LISBON, Nov. 15 (UPI)—An explosion today outside the home of former Agriculture Minister António Lopes Cardoso caused extensive damage but no injuries, a police spokesman said.

The explosion at the servants' entrance to the house in central Lisbon blew in the door and destroyed the kitchen, the spokesman said.

A leading member of the Socialist party's left wing, Mr. Lopes Cardoso resigned from the Government two weeks ago. He had been criticized by moderate Socialists for his handling of land reform and his willingness to work with the Communist Party.

Court Denies Paroled Convict Plea

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—The Supreme Court ruled 7-2 today that a convict who is paroled before serving his full sentence and who is then convicted and imprisoned for a second crime, committed while on parole, has no constitutional right to an immediate parole revocation hearing.

This means that parole authorities may wait until the defendant serves his sentence for the second crime before they decide whether the commission of that crime merits revoking the original parole grant and whether the defendant must serve the remainder of his first sentence.

This is true, under the Court's decision, even if the defendant must wait as much as 10 years between the second crime and the hearing on whether that crime merits parole revocation.

Today's decision came in the case of an Apache Indian in Arizona who was convicted in 1962 of rape and sentenced to 10 years in prison. He was paroled in 1966 and, while on parole, he shot and killed two other men. He pleaded guilty to one charge of manslaughter and one of second-degree murder, and received two concurrent 10-year sentences.

Prompt Hearing Sought

The defendant wanted a prompt parole revocation hearing so that if parole authorities ruled he must serve any of his remaining sentence on the first offense, all sentences could run concurrently.

The Court's opinion was written by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger; the dissent, by Justice John Paul Stevens, joined by William T. Brennan Jr. The decision involved Federal procedures but presumably applies to state proceedings as well.

The ruling comes four years after a major Supreme Court ruling on parole, and, in effect, adopts the narrower of possible interpretations of that earlier ruling.

In the 1972 case, also written by the Chief Justice, the Court established various procedural safeguards for parole revocation. The Court ruled that states must give an individual the opportunity to be heard before revoking his or her parole.

Several lower Federal appeals courts have ruled as the high court did today—that where a parolee is imprisoned for a crime committed while on parole, no immediate revocation hearing is necessary. Three other lower appeals courts, however, ruled that the Supreme Court decision in 1972 required immediate hearings in such cases. Two other lower courts took intermediate positions.

The dissenters today contended that the majority opinion could erase the gains established in the 1972 case, known as Morrisey v. Brewer.

"If unlimited delay is permitted, the procedural safeguards which were fashioned in Morrisey to assure the parolee a fair opportunity to present facts in mitigation and to challenge the government's assertions will have become meaningless," they contended.

The dispute turns largely on the effect of the issuing of a parole violator warrant. Federal parole authorities, in cases involving imprisonment for crime committed while on parole, follow a practice of issuing a warrant and sending it to the prison where the parolee is serving his new sentence. They issue it as a kind of "detainer," so that the prison will hold the defendant rather than release him when he has finished his sentence, and do not "execute" it, by serving it on the defendant himself.

The majority contended that mere issuing of the warrant does not trigger the requirements of procedural safeguards connected with parole revocation. The defendant is in prison and thus deprived of liberty, the majority reasoned, not because of the warrant itself but because of his conviction for the second crime.

The dissenters contended that the issuing of the warrant does trigger the defendant's rights to procedural safeguards, because it is comparable to an arrest or an indictment, "which identifies a time when it is clear that the Government has a basis for going forward with appropriate proceedings and from which the right to a speedy determination accrues."

The Justices also disagreed about the practical effects of delaying a defendant's parole revocation until the end of his imprisonment on the second offense.

Rhodesian Response to Kissinger Hinged on an Ambigui

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—Crucial to acceptance by the Rhodesian Government of the American plan for black majority rule was receipt of an ambiguous message from Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger that suggested that black leaders had agreed to a Rhodesian proposal that would allow whites to retain the defense and police ministries in an interim government.

As a result of the message of Sept. 21 —shown recently to The New York Times—Prime Minister Ian D. Smith was able to muster his party's support for the five-point package plan he had earlier told Mr. Kissinger and Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa was "my own suicide note."

The New York Times has spent several weeks looking into the issue of the white ministers. Because of the Rhodesian talks, under way in Geneva, not every participant in the Kissinger negotiations has been willing to speak, even in confidence, but several were willing for the sake of historical accuracy to speak candidly.

What emerges is a complicated picture in which Mr. Kissinger, in what appears to have been his final major negotiating mission, felt that an almost historic opportunity had unexpectedly arisen to settle the Rhodesian question through diplomacy, and that to facilitate the process he chose to be ambiguous when candor might have risked failure.

On Sept. 19, Mr. Kissinger had handed Mr. Smith the five-point plan and said he had to accept it or else face total isolation in his guerrilla war. In eight hours of desperate bargaining, Mr. Smith persuaded Mr. Kissinger to seek black concurrence in a guarantee that the defense and police portfolios would remain white during the transitional period before an independent black Rhodesia was formed.

Without that guarantee, Mr. Smith told Mr. Kissinger and Mr. Vorster, he could not be sure he could "sell" the rest of the Kissinger plan, including a call for majority rule in two years, a constitution to be worked out by an interim government and British legal sanction for Rhodesian independence.

Provisions for Whites Added

On Sept. 21, Mr. Kissinger sent a message to Mr. Smith from Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, that on the basis of discussions with black leaders in Lusaka, Zambia, and Dar es Salaam, he believed the provisions for the white defense and police ministers "can be added" to the five points.

It was an ambiguously worded instruction in a longer message and did not specifically say the black leaders had accepted the proposal, but it did leave that impression in both Pretoria and Salisbury.

Almost as soon as Mr. Smith made his speech on Sept. 24 and said the ministers of defense and police "would be white" it was denounced by black leaders. With the Rhodesian talks in Geneva floundering, the issue has remained controversial.

In essence, the issue has come down to who has told the truth.

Mr. Smith has said he agreed to the five-point plan he made public because he had received assurances from Mr. Kissinger that the black leaders had accepted the whole package, including Mr. Smith's additions on the white ministers. In his view, either the blacks have reneged or Mr. Kissinger misled him.

Deny Approving Details of Plan

The blacks, such as President Julius K. Nyerere of Tanzania, insist that they did not give their approval to the details of the five-point plan, only to the general thrust of majority rule in two years, leaving it to Britain to work out details later with black and white Rhodesians. They say they would have rejected the proposal for white ministers.

Mr. Kissinger and his aides have been evasive.

On Oct. 24, Mr. Kissinger said on television that, "I think everybody is telling the truth." Other Americans have said the black leaders raised no specific objections and so this was interpreted as approving the five-point plan as read by Mr. Smith.

Central to Mr. Kissinger's diplomacy were his meetings with Mr. Smith in Pretoria, South Africa, on Sunday, Sept. 19 and the cable traffic from Mr. Kissinger to Mr. Smith on Sept. 21.

After months of intense diplomatic efforts in collaboration with Britain, Mr. Kissinger had succeeded, with the aid of Mr. Vorster, in getting Mr. Smith to the point where he was under considerable pressure to accept the principle of black majority rule in two years or face economic and possibly military disaster from the expanding guerrilla war against his minority regime.

Originally, Mr. Kissinger had hoped that the black "front-line" Presidents, those near Rhodesia, would make a formal proposal similar to the five points made by Mr. Smith. But the blacks, who had failed in earlier negotiating efforts in 1974, refused on the ground that Mr. Smith would once again reject their proposals and subject them to ridicule from radical Africans.

Mr. Kissinger met with Mr. Vorster in Zurich from Sept. 4 to 6 and they agreed on some proposals—cleared with the blacks—that Mr. Vorster would ask Mr. Smith to accept publicly. In Zurich, Mr. Vorster for the first time urged Mr. Kissinger to meet himself with Mr. Smith to insure success.

Since Mr. Smith was regarded as "tricky" and "unreliable" by blacks—and indeed by the British who had charged him with a series of deceptions over the 11 years of Rhodesian "independence"—Mr. Kissinger at first refused.

But as he set out on Sept. 13 on his African mission that was to culminate in Pretoria, Mr. Kissinger concluded privately that he would almost inevitably have to confer with Mr. Smith.

In Dar es Salaam, Mr. Nyerere was not optimstic that Mr. Smith would agree to majority rule in two years and said so in a press conference. In Lusaka, President Kenneth D. Kaunda was more supportive but not very optimistic.

When Mr. Kissinger arrived in Pretoria in his Air Force jet on Friday afternoon, Sept. 17, he said that the chances for progress were better on the nagging problem of independence for South-West Africa than on Rhodesia.

Reporters were still told that the chances were slim that Mr. Kissinger would see Mr. Smith. The Rhodesian leader was due to arrive in Pretoria the next day, ostensibly to attend a rugby match with most of his Cabinet.

That evening, at Mr. Vorster's home, Mr. Kissinger was again urged to see Mr. Smith. The South Africans said that Mr. Smith would not be able to tell his "hard-liners" in Salisbury that the days of white minority rule were doomed unless he could inform them that he had been persuaded by the Americans and not just by the South Africans, whose motives of self-preservation were suspect to the Rhodesians.

On Saturday evening, Sept. 18, Mr. Vorster told Mr. Kissinger that if he saw Mr. Smith the next day there was a "reasonable" chance that the Rhodesian would agree to the proposals being talked about.

On Sunday morning, at 9:30, Mr. Kissinger and Mr. Smith met at the home of the American Ambassador, William G. Bowdler, accompanied by their aides.

Before the meeting, a Kissinger aide, Lawrence S. Eagleburger, said it would probably last one hour. That was what the South Africans had predicted. But instead it lasted closer to four, with Mr. Smith passionately defending the need for a white-led Rhodesia to fight against Communism in southern Africa and arguing for American aid and not American pressure.

Climactic Talks Held

Mr. Kissinger coldly presented him with intelligence estimates that predicted military and economic disaster in a year, and said that Communism would only increase in Africa if there was no move toward a negotiated settlement now that would allow moderate blacks to take power in Rhodesia.

That evening, the Americans and Rhodesians gathered at the hotel of Mr. Vorster for the climactic talks.

Mr. Kissinger handed Mr. Smith a typed list of five points that he said must be the basis for a Rhodesian settlement. In addition, he gave him a memo on the economic trust that would be created by outside powers to help Rhodesia economically and to guarantee the property rights of whites, encouraging them to stay but giving them compensation if they left.

He asked Mr. Smith to agree to the plan and make his acceptance that night to the reporters then sitting on the grass outside the house in the darkness. Mr. Smith read aloud the first point, slowly, "Rhodesia agrees to majority rule within two years."

According to participants in the meeting, Mr. Smith then looked around the room and said, "You want me to sign my own suicide note."

There was only silence. Later, Mr. Kissinger was to say it was the most "painful" moment in his life watching Mr. Smith agree in effect to the capitulation of his Government.

But Mr. Smith refused to accept the points that night.

He said that he would recommend acceptance to his Government and party, but added that he needed additional "sweeteners."

Specifically, there was the question of the two-tier government that would run the interim regime before final independence.

Flexible Transition Period Proposed by Britain to End Rhodesia Parley Deadlock

Special to The New York Times

GENEVA, Nov. 15—Britain sought today to end a deadlock over the timetable for majority rule in Rhodesia by proposing a flexible transition period.

Ivor Richard of Britain, chairman of the conference on Rhodesia's future, suggested either March 1, 1978, or Dec. 1, 1977 as possible dates for formal independence with the black majority in control.

He told the delegations of the white minority Government and of four black movements that Britain was prepared to grant formal independence to its former colony on March 1, 1978, if the Geneva talks ended successfully by the end of this month. This has been the British position at the 18-day-old conference.

But, Mr. Richard went on, if the legal and constitutional processes for transfer to majority rule could be completed in 12 months, as the blacks maintain, Britain would then advance the date to Dec. 1, 1977.

The Briton said the conference had spent too much time on the timetable and should move on to the key question of the composition and function of an interim biracial government.

Two black leaders, Bishop Abel Muzorewa and the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, were prepared to go on to the next issue, but Joshua Nkomo, a rival of Bishop Muzorewa for control of the African National Council, and Robert Mugabe, political spokesman for a guerrilla group, demanded and obtained a 24-hour adjournment to study the proposals.

The Rhodesian Foreign Minister, P. K. van de Byl, reiterated his Government's view that 23 months would be required to complete the transition.

oscow Jews Who Faced Prison Up to 5 Years for Protests Are Released as First Offenders and Family Men

By DAVID K. SHIPLER
Special to The New York Times

OW, Nov. 15—The Soviet au- today released two Jewish dissi- ho had faced the possibility of ve years in prison for protests own Moscow last month.

ove was greeted with amazement activists, who said they could ember a previous instance where charges against dissidents did not ultimately proceed to conviction and imprisonment.

"It's unprecedented—I don't remember any precedent in our movement," said Anatoly Shcharansky, a would-be emigrant. He said the two men, Boris Chernobylsky and Iosif Ass, both 32 years old, had been told that though the charge of "malicious hooliganism" against them was valid, they were being freed because the offenses were their first, and they had families. Both men are married, and each has two daughters under 6 years old.

One leading dissident, Vladimir Slepak, attributed the release to "pressure from the United States." During the protests, he had received a telegram of concern and support from Jimmy Carter, then campaigning for the Presidency. Senator Edward M. Kennedy, the Masschusetts Democrat, had also cabled his support.

Mr. Slepak and 11 other Jews staged sit-ins in government offices last month in an effort to obtain written explanations of the reasons for denying them emigration visas. They also wanted to know how long they would have to wait for visas. Most of the demonstrators were scientists who had lost their jobs after applying for emigration.

They went to present a petition in the reception office of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, the nominal legislative body, whose offices are sometimes regarded as a court of last resort. When they refused to leave at closing time, they were put into buses and released on the city's outskirts.

On the second day, a dozen protesters including Mr. Slepak, said they were bused to a forest 35 to 40 miles from Moscow and beaten by plainclothesmen. The ranks of the demonstrators then swelled to 50, and arrests followed. Twenty-two served 15-day jail sentences and eight women were fined 20 rubles ($26) each.

But Mr. Chernobylsky, a radio engineer who applied for emigration a year and a half ago, and Dr. Ass, a physician who has been waiting three years to leave, were charged under Section 206 of the Criminal Code, their fellow dissidents said. The section calls for penalties of one to five years for "malicious hooliganism."

Mr. Slepak and others, who formed a defense committee for the two, said they thought Mr. Chernobylsky and Dr. Ass had been selected as examples to deter further protests.

U.S. Discloses Shortage of Swine Flu Vaccine for Children 3 to 17

By HAROLD M. SCHMECK Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—The United States Public Health service announced today that there would be no large-scale, swine flu immunization effort for Americans in the 3-through-17-year-old age group because only limited supplies of vaccine suitable for children would be available this year.

The decision, which applies to healthy children, appears to be another serious setback in a national program that has already experienced many delays and difficulties.

When the swine flu program was announced by President Ford in March, the goal was to immunize most of the 215 million Americans and to have the job completed by Christmas. So far, an estimated 20 million adults have been immunized, leaving another 120 million in the adult "target population." Vaccination of healthy children has not yet begun because of difficulties until now in establishing safe and effective dosage rules.

This dosage schedule was announced today by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, together with the statement that there would be only enough suitable vaccine for 4 million children in the 3-through-17 age group. The Census Bureau estimates there are 57,200,000 people in that age group in the United States.

Dr. Theodore Cooper, Assistant Secretary for Health, said: "While it is clear that we have the formula to provide a safe and effective vaccine for children, it is also clear that not nearly enough will be available before the influenza season nears its end, despite production efforts by the manufacturers."

He emphasized that there would be sufficient vaccine for children with chronic illnesses, such as heart disease, lung disease and other conditions that give them a high risk of serious consequences should they catch flu.

There also appear to be ample supplies of flu vaccine for adults.

For high-risk children, the Government recommends bivalent vaccine to protect them against swine flu and the influenza type called A-Victoria, which was prevalent in the United States last winter. For the general population, immunization against swine flu is recommended because it is a type against which few Americans have substantial immunity. This strain caused an outbreak of flu at Fort Dix, N.J., early this year, but has not been found anywhere in people since then.

Almost from the beginning, the swine flu project has been hit by delays in vaccine production and distribution. Early in the program one vaccine maker discovered that it had made large quantities of vaccine against the wrong virus. Late in the summer it was found that the total vaccine supply to be available by the starting date of Oct. 1 would be far short of the original plans. The shortage of split-virus vaccine for children appears to be another result of these difficulties.

The difficulty in establishing the proper dosage for healthy children stems from a problem with swine flu vaccine that was discovered last spring after testing it on several thousand people.

The manufacturers had produced two types of swine flu vaccine. In both types the flu virus was inactivated chemically so that it could not cause infection. In one type the virus particles, although killed, were left intact as whole virus particles. In the other type they were disrupted chemically. This latter type is called "split-virus" vaccine.

Second Dose Is Urged

Field trials of the vaccine last spring showed that children were insufficiently protected by a single vaccination of split-virus vaccine and that the whole virus type produced too many reactions such as sore arms, transient fevers and feelings of illness and nausea.

Further studies were undertaken and, last month, scientists at a national meeting said it appeared that two doses of split-virus vaccine given about four weeks apart would be safe and effective and would minimize discomforting reactions.

Today, the Public Health Service made that finding its recommendation. The proper dosage for healthy children, it said, will be two doses of split-virus vaccine given about four weeks apart. But the announcement also said that only eight million doses of that type would be available before February, which means that only four million children can be covered.

The Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices, which makes recommendations to the Public Health Service, also advised that persons between the ages of 18 and 24 receive a second dose of either whole virus or split-virus vaccine to assure maximum protection against swine flu.

The limited supplies of vaccine for healthy children will be distributed to the states on a per capita basis, the Government announcement said today, so that it can be used at neighborhood health centers and other urban sites.

West Point Women Found Pushed Beyond Endurance

FORT LEE, Va., Nov. 15 (UPI)—An anthropologist who directed the integration of women at the United States Military Academy at West Point said women pushed themselves beyond their endurance to keep up with their male counterparts.

Dr. Nora Scott Kinzer said that women had done better academically than tests than their male peers and had a great amount of stress placed on them because they were "firsts."

After a six-week summer program, she was proved that women were unable do as well physiologically as men, Dr. Kinzer said in an address on a day dedicated to equal rights for women in the military forces.

"In an effort to prove themselves, many women pushed themselves beyond endurance," she said. "Minor physical problems became major ones because women wouldn't go to sick call."

Despite the physical difficulties, only 12 percent of the women, compared with 10 percent of the men, dropped out of the West Point program after the summer, she said. Some dropped out because of the strenuous physical routine, while others quit to go to secular four-year colleges, including Harvard and Stanford, she said.

F.B.I. No Longer Exhibits 'Crime of the Century'

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—One of the prize exhibits of the Federal Bureau of Investigation—entitled "The Crime of the Century" on the way Julius and Ethel Rosenberg were convicted as atomic spy plotters—is no longer being displayed.

Attention was called to the exhibit's absence today by the National Committee to Reopen the Rosenberg Case. The exhibit had included such items as a torn Jello box, recalling testimony that two pieces of such a box had been a recognition signal for two participants in the alleged conspiracy for which the Rosenbergs were electrocuted in 1953.

An F.B.I. spokesman said that the exhibit was "not on the tour route now" because it was "not rebuilt" when the bureau moved from the Justice Department Building into the new J. Edgar Hoover Building, which was opened Oct. 1, 1975.

The committee, led by Robert Meeropol, one of the Rosenbergs' two sons, and Marshall Perlin, counsel, presented a petition reportedly bearing 30,000 signatures, asking that Attorney General Edward H. Levi "immediately release the files" on the case under the Freedom of Information Act. Mr. Meeropol told the Justice Department that a son of Mr. Levi was a signer. About 29,000 pages of F.B.I. documents had been released last December.

Gilmore Gets Engaged While Awaiting Execution

POINT OF THE MOUNTAIN, Utah, Nov. 15 (UPI)—Gary Mark Gilmore, who wanted to die today, got engaged instead.

"I told him today, 'Yes, I will,' and got a very surprised look on his face," said Nicole Barrett, a 20-year-old divorcée and mother of two, who accepted the proposal during a two-hour meeting with the convicted slayer on Death Row.

"But I don't think any of the prison officials would ever consider it," she added as she left the rendezvous at Utah State Prison. Warden Sam Smith said she was right.

Asked if she really wanted to marry someone who had begged the state to execute him, she replied: "Yes, you can understand that, can't you?"

Gov. Calvin L. Rampton stayed the execution to allow a review of the sentence by the State Board of Pardons. Mr. Gilmore will appear before the board Wednesday to renew his plea for death. His execution would be the first in the United States in nine years.

Library Workers Accept New Contract at Brown U.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 15 (AP)—Library workers at Brown University have approved a new contract, ending four and a half months of labor strife at the Ivy League School.

The contract, approved by a two-to-one margin last night means a 6 percent pay increase and a $100 retroactive lump sum payment for each of the 49 library workers.

Picket lines have been up at Brown since July when buildings and grounds workers went out on strike. They settled last month. The library workers, also members of the Service Employes International Union, struck in mid-August.

The university has kept its libraries open by using supervisory personnel, a few union members who crossed the lines and new employees who were hired after the strike started.

The striking library workers will be back on the job Nov. 22, after the university finds new jobs for the temporary workers.

Bus Drivers on Strike In Columbus, Ohio

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Nov. 15 (AP)—City bus drivers and repairmen went on strike today after rejecting a contract offer by the Central Ohio Transit Authority. The strike affects 50,000 passengers who use the system.

Drivers and repairmen, members of the Transport Workers Union, voted 255 to 121 to reject a contract offer that had been tentatively agreed to by union bargainers.

Drivers refused an 8 percent raise, or $1.20 an hour, over a two-year contract. The T.W.U. wants a $2.25 an hour or 43 percent raise. Drivers earn $5.50 an hour after one year.

For a Change, Post Office Says It Had Surplus for Three Months

By ERNEST HOLSENDOLPH
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—The United States Postal Service, which has been running financial deficits since its formation five years ago, announced a "milestone" today: It had a $15 million surplus for July, August and September.

The huge agency had been running deficits of up to $1 billion a year, despite infusions of Federal assistance and increased rates for customers.

Postmaster General Benjamin F. Bailar hailed the recent surplus but declared that it was too early to say that the battle to ward off insolvency had been won. His report follows a disclosure by President-elect Jimmy Carter that he favors legislation to make the semi-private corporation more responsive politically by requiring the postmaster general to be appointed by the White House.

Mr. Bailar turned aside suggestions by reporters that the timing of his announcement had political overtones. He did say, however, "I continue to believe that the basic thrust of the reorganized postal service is sound, and has had positive results in the last five years."

Cutback in Employees

A number of factors helped the agency to balance income and costs, at least for the July, August and September period, Mr. Bailar said. They included a slight increase in postal volume and—much more important—a reduction in operating costs made possible by a cutback in employees. The strike by employees of the United Parcel Service on the Eastern seaboard was not a factor in the improved financial results, he said, because its impact has been more recent.

"One swallow doesn't make a summer," Mr. Bailar told reporters at a briefing this morning, "and while it's important, it doesn't mean we are out of the woods."

The profitable reduction in employees has been proceeding at a rate of about 2,000 a month, the postal service figures show. The agency now employs 664,080, compared with 728,911 at the time it was reorganized in 1971.

"This is not a fluke," Mr. Bailar said. "Our employment level has dropped in every craft and at every level."

Man Hours Also Decreased

He said that the number of man hours worked had also decreased, refuting allegations that casual or part-time employees were taking up the slack left by reductions in the full-time work force.

"We have made this surplus possible by cost reductions of all kinds," he said, "but the attrition in employees has been most significant."

The postal union contracts do not allow for lay-offs of regular employees, but the postal service has followed a policy of not filling vacancies left by departing employees.

Despite criticism by Congressmen and others about the quality and extent of service, Mr. Bailar said that the recent balancing of the books "was not at the expense of service."

As proof, he said, the agency's figures show that 95 percent of first class urban mail gets overnight service. Even the recent and continuing glut of some postal facilities caused by the U.P.S. strike has not caused letter service to deteriorate, he said, although parcels are now delayed "up to three days."

Because of these recent signs of fiscal recovery, the Postal Service has abandoned thoughts of asking for another rate increase, Mr. Bailar said.

"We are now hopeful that there will be no need for a postal rate increase in 1977," he said. Previously a rate increase had been considered likely by next fall.

Computer-Made Movies Of Heart During Exercise Developed by N.I.H. Team

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15(AP)—Scientists have developed a method of making computer-reconstructed movies of the heart while a patient vigorously exercises—something that the experts say cannot be done with standard ways of making internal heart pictures.

Researchers at the National Institute of Health say that the technique also is much less expensive, painful and dangerous to the patient than other forms of angiography, as cardiac picture-taking is called.

In a report scheduled today in Miami at an American Heart Association meeting, the researchers said that pictures taken while the heart exercises could reveal problems not evident when it is at rest.

With traditional angiography, an incision is made into an artery in the arm or leg and a tube is pushed through the vessel into the chambers of the heart.

Dr. Jeffrey S. Borer, a senior cardiology scientist at the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute, and Dr. Stephen L. Bacharach and Michael V. Green of N.I.H.'s Clinical Center say that their method will replace or at least supplement the older techniques.

The new method requires injecting a protein containing a small amount of a short-lived radioactive isotope into almost any vein. A few minutes later, an instrument that measures radioactivity is placed on the left side of the patient's chest.

A computer registers each point of radioactivity in the heart every 10-thousandths of a second and builds a three-dimensional picture that appears on a television screen.

"We essentially play one picture after another and make a movie," Dr. Borer said in an interview.

Wake for Philadelphia Hotel Booked Solid

By BEN A. FRANKLIN
Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 15—The Bellevue Stratford Hotel has three days to live, but an autopsy was performed today on the 72-year-old rococo palace.

In the ornate North Cameo Room on the domed rooftop level of the Bellevue, a handful of delegates gathered for a day-long scientific symposium sponsored by the Philadelphia chapter of the American Lung Association. The subject was: "Legionnaire's Disease."

The group was told that, three months after the summer outbreak of an epidemic that took 29 lives, the one post-mortem link between all the victims was some exposure to the Bellevue Stratford Hotel, the site of the convention last July of the Pennsylvania American Legion after which the mysterious flu-like affliction took its name.

Still groping for a medical explanation, federal communicable disease officials were making "no final conclusions yet," one of them reported to the scientific gathering on the 18th floor.

Disease Linked to Hotel

But the pattern emerging from statistical analysis of responses to questionnaires sent to 151 survivors of the disease, Dr. David W. Fraser of the Federal Center for Disease Control said, links all of the victims, dead and alive, to "some association with the Bellevue."

The "association" was not "proof," Dr. Fraser said. But it was nonetheless lethal to the Bellevue. You did not need to be an epidemiologist to explain it.

It was this same cause and effect conclusion, widely if inexpertly drawn by thousands of frightened prospective guests at the elegant but fraying 72-year-old Bellevue Stratford, that ruined its transient trade and led the hotel management to decide to close it down forever on Thursday for lack of business.

The occupancy rate since last Aug. 2, when news of the Legion epidemic began to spawn fear of infection in individual transients and, as importantly, in the planners and bookers of hotel conventions, has fallen from a normal and profitable 80 percent to a sepulchral low of 3 percent. This entailed a $1 million loss in maintaining a business that employs 450 people.

In the darkened Bellevue ballroom today, a crew of hotel painters was touching up scuff marks and handprints on the white-painted wainscoating as if great events would continue there.

Since the Bellevue opened in September 1904, every President of the United States since Theodore Roosevelt, who was elected that year, has visited the hotel. When the Republicans held their nominating conventions in Philadelphia in 1940 and again in 1948, as the Democrats did in 1936 and 1948, the Bellevue was the headquarters hotel. Kings and queens have stayed there and the hotel may have been the scene of the most lavish coming-out party in history—a $100,000 extravaganza on New Year's Eve 1929 for Eleanor Dorrance, a debutante daughter of the Campbell Soup Company family.

Major Events Rebooked

According to William Chadwick, the Bellevue's resident general manager, the two major debutante events remaining this year have been rebooked at the Philadelphia Sheraton. The thousands of revelers who had planned to use the Bellevue as a partying headquarters during the Army-Navy football weekend, Nov. 27-28, will be accommodated at the Benjamin Franklin and at the Barclay, Mr. Chadwick said.

What has astonished and vexed the loyal hotel staff, however—men and women, many in their 60's, who have worked at the Bellevue most of their adult lives—have been the hordes of sentimental lunch and dinner guests who have suddenly descended on the Hunt Room and the Stratford Gardens, the two lobby-level dining rooms.

The crush began on Wednesday, the day after the announcement of the closing. By Friday's lunch time, the mobs were such that the bouillabaisse, a specialty of the day, ran out at 12:45. A bartender said "they've been drinking more, too—it's like a wake here."

Disposition is Uncertain

The disposition of the Bellevue's remains after Thursday is in doubt.

Last week Mayor Frank L. Rizzo announced plans to have the city buy the property, demolish the hotel and erect a new larger convention hotel. The Albert M. Greenfield Company, the real estate concern that would like to sell the hotel, says it has had queries from private purchasers, but none that can be called "offers," with cash in hand.

IT ISN'T HIS YEAR: Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona being comforted by his wife, Ella, in their McLean Va., home yesterday. Mr. Udall, who lost his bid for the Democratic nomination to Jimmy Carter, fell from a ladder at his suburban Washington home and broke both arms Saturday.

Abducted State Trooper Is Slain; Suspect Captured

DURHAM, N.C., Nov. 15 (AP)—A Virginia state trooper abducted today at gunpoint in his unmarked patrol car died with more than 21 bullet wounds in his body. Officials said they did not know whether he had been killed by his captor or had died in a hail of police gunfire at a roadblock.

The body of Garland West Fisher Jr., 33 years old, was pulled from his car after North Carolina highway patrolmen had used a tractor trailer rig as a roadblock on rain-slick Interstate Highway 85 10 miles north of here.

Trooper Fisher's alleged abductor, Reuben Conley, 33, of Atlanta, was wounded in the chest, hand and knee and hospitalized in fair condition, according to Col. E. W. Jones of the North Carolina Highway Patrol.

Mr. Conley was charged by Virginia authorities with kidnapping and assault with a weapon. He also faces charges by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Colonel Jones said.

The colonel said that Mr. Conley's sister had told him that her brother was a "troubled guy" who "thought someone was trying to kill him."

The drama began shortly before Trooper Fisher's shift was to have ended at midnight. The trooper stopped a car headed north in the southbound lanes of Interstate 85 south of Petersburg, Va.

He was shot and forced to drive toward Atlanta, and then apparently was allowed to radio his headquarters, Colonel Jones said.

As a Virginia state police car trailed the automobile into North Carolina, the roadblock was set up with the tractor trailer put into position to simulate an accident. About two dozen North Carolina troopers were at the scene.

Colonel Jones said the car had tried to avoid the roadblock, but he declined to give further details.

The Durham County prosecutor, Anthony Brannon, said the North Carolina troopers had opened fire when they heard several shots from within the vehicle.

Trooper Fisher, a 12-year-veteran of the patrol, was married and the father of a 6-year-old girl.

However, the judge told the Government lawyer, William Strasser, that he could assume a plea of not guilty in preparing his case.

Seeks Refining of Language

Judge Lyons rebuked the Government for what he called "inaccurate or inappropriate" phrasing in the complaint orders and called on Mr. Strasser to clarify and refine the language.

In the Federal proceeding in Waterbury, Mr. Kaminskas was also taciturn, speaking a single word, "yes," when asked to confirm the identity of his Legal Aid lawyer, Raymond Norko.

Also of medium build with thinning hair, glasses and a forehead he wrinkled in seeming nervousness, Mr. Kaminskas appeared in court in a brown and white sweater and brown slacks. Through his lawyer he made an appeal to close the hearing to the press and to have it moved closer to his rooming house in Hartford—requests denied by Judge Anthony DeGaeto.

In Baltimore, Mr. Detlavs was the only one of the three to plead not guilty. He is baldish, a tall man who wears a device to replace a left foot recently amputated for cancer. He had a stern expression and spoke only to give his name. His wife and daughter sat in the hearing room and also declined to respond to questions.

The deportation proceedings are only the fourth time the Government has gone to court to expel alleged war criminals. But the only case to meet with success was that against Hermine Braunsteiner Ryan, a former guard at the Maidanek Nazi concentration camp in Poland, who was discovered living in Queens. It began as a deportation effort but became an extradition case when the West German Government asked for her return. She is now on trial in West Germany for murder.

Asked why the cases were coming up only now, 31 years after the end of the war, Maurice F. Kiley, the Immigration District director in New York, said, "We didn't have the evidence prior to this time." It has become available only now, he contended, after extensive investigation and from witnesses who have come out from "behind the iron curtain."

House Panel Picks 170 to Investigate Kennedy and King Slayings

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15 (UPI)—The House Committee on Assassinations, meeting formally for the first time, announced today that a study group of 170 persons would conduct what it hoped will be the definitive investigations of the murders of President Kennedy and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Representative Thomas M. Downing, Democrat of Virginia, the committee chairman until he retires at the end of this year, told reporters after a two-hour closed session: "We're going down every street until we get a blind alley. Congress mandated us to do a thorough job."

Walter Fauntroy, Democratic delegate from the District of Columbia and the newly named chairman of a subcommittee to investigate the King slaying, said: "We want to find out what the evidence is and follow it where it leads, no matter where."

A subcommittee concentrating on the Kennedy killing 13 years ago this month will be headed by Representative Richardson Preyer, Democrat of North Carolina.

Mr. Downing said that the full committee had asked the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Central Intelligence Agency for all documents and memoranda pertaining to the assassinations. An aide said that a two-foot-high stack of documents already had been received from the C.I.A.

Reported Hoover Memo

Mr. Downing said that he had not yet seen a reported 1964 memo from F.B.I. Director J. Edgar Hoover that supposedly stated that Lee Harvey Oswald told Cuban officials he was going to kill President Kennedy more than a month before he actually did so.

The assassin was known to have visited the Cuban Embassy in Mexico City before President Kennedy was shot.

The Hoover memo, according to press reports, was found after a new search of bureau files at the committee's request.

Representative Christopher J. Dodd, Democrat of Connecticut, another member of the committee, said that the panel should "make it one of its first orders of business to obtain and evaluate" that document.

Mr. Downing, who is expected to be replaced as chairman by Representative Henry B. Gonzalez, Democrat of Texas, when the new Contress convenes in January, said an investigative crew of 170 "sounds like a lot of people."

But he said that it actually is a "bare bones staff" for the immense job, compared to that used by the Warren Commission, which investigated the Kennedy assassination.

The Warren Commission concluded that Lee Harvey Oswald acted alone in assassinating President Kennedy. Evidence that has come to light since thtn indicates that the F.B.I. and C.I.A. knew more about the assassin's Cuban connections than was given the Warren panel and subsequent Congressional investigative bodies.

clear Unit Denies Financial Assistance to Groups Representing Opposition Views

By DAVID BURNHAM
Special to The New York Times

HINGTON, Nov. 15—The Nuclear ory Commission has announced will not begin a broad program cial assistance for private groups shed to express their views about ernment's nuclear policies at com- hearings.

gram to help support the expres- opposition views recently has tiated by the Federal Trade Com- and the Environmental Protec- ency is scheduled to start a simi- gram in the near future. Both the F.T.C. and E.P.A. efforts were specifically authorized and funded by Congress.

While rejecting the proposal for a general assistance program, the Commission announced that it would ask Congress for funds to assist those who wished to participate in the hearings on the narrow but important question of whether the Government should license the widespread use of plutonium.

Dr. Arthur C. Tamplin, a staff member of the Natural Resources Defense Council, said, however, that the commission promise to ask for Congressional approval of funds for the intervenors in the plutonium hearing was "an empty gesture" because the hearings were scheduled to begin on Nov. 30 and no assistance program could possibly be approved by the House and Senate for several months.

Commissioner Victor Gilensky objected to the majority decision, stating that he believed the Commission had authority to fund qualified intervenors in specific cases at the present time and that it should ask Congress for authority to begin a broad legal assistance program.

At the request of the regulatory commission, the General Accounting Office said in a report in February 1976 that the commission had the power to extend financial assistance to interested parties whose participation was essential for the consideration and disposal of a special issue.

The commission said that because of the extraordinary importance of its decision on the use of plutonium in conventional reactors, it would ask Congress to provide $200,000 to help fund qualified intervenors. In addition, the commission said it had decided to lessen the burden of the hearings by providing transcripts and by waiving the cost for clearing persons who required access to classified data.

The commission, in deciding not to authorize the proposed legal assistance program, said that "the institutional role of Congress in resolving the funding question must be respected." As far as is known, no agency of government has provided financial assistance to intervenors without specific Congressional approval.

Peking Starts Building A Mausoleum for Mao

PEKING, Nov. 15 (Reuters)—China today started building a mausoleum for Mao Tse-tung in Peking's Tien An Men Square and pledged to complete the project at the earliest possible date.

Thousands of workers and soldiers moved onto the square, erected a seven-foot-high wooden fence, ripped up paving stones, felled trees and uprooted lampposts.

A Western diplomat was informed by a Chinese official that the memorial was being built at the south end of the square, behind the Martyrs' Monument.

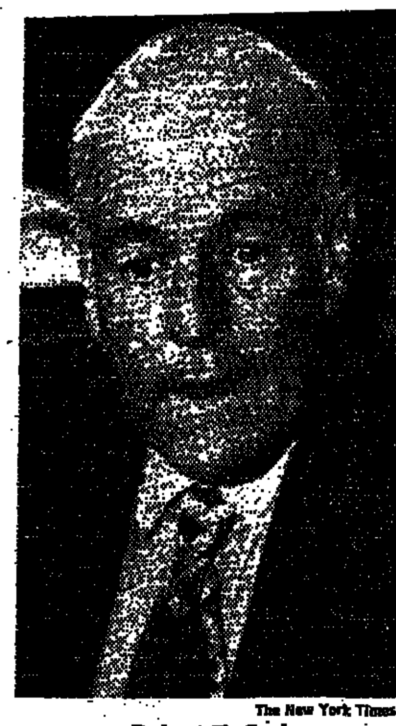
Groh Is Indicted on Bribery Charge; $10,000 Political Payoff Alleged

By SELWYN RAAB



The New York Times
Robert T. Groh

Robert T. Groh, a former Sanitation Commissioner and former Deputy Borough President of Queens, has been indicted on bribery and grand-larceny charges in connection with an alleged $10,000 political payoff in Queens for a motel zoning change.

The indictments, which are expected to be announced today, were voted last week by a grand jury that heard evidence presented by the office of John F. Keenan, the special state prosecutor for corruption cases.

Mr. Keenan declined to comment, but Mr. Groh's lawyer, Marvin B. Segal, confirmed yesterday that Mr. Groh would be arraigned today on the charges.

Mr. Segal said Mr. Groh would plead not guilty. He also said that Mr. Groh, who was elected as a Civil Court judge this month, would postpone taking the post until the accusations were disposed of.

Background of the Case

The indictments assert that Mr. Groh while Deputy Borough President in 1972 suggested that a law firm representing the Sheraton Corporation contribute $20,000 to a Democratic fund-raising dinner. The alleged payments were paid to total $10,700 and were allegedly passed along in 1972 and 1973, supposedly to help the corporation get a zoning variance to expand its inn at LaGuardia Airport.

Mr. Groh is not charged with personally keeping any of the money. The alleged payments were said to have gone to a campaign dinner in 1972 for Borough President Donald R. Manes of Queens.

Investigators and others knowledgeable about the inquiry gave this background:

The first indications of a possible bribe were picked up by aides to Mr. Keenan's predecessor, Maurice H. Nadjari, through a telephone tap in the office of Thomas I. Fitzgerald, the former Manhattan Public Administrator. Mr. Fitzgerald, whose office was a branch of the Surrogate Court, reportedly said he had got a fee for assisting in the zoning change.

Mr. Fitzgerald, who has since been indicted on an unrelated perjury charge, later changed his story and told investigators that the zoning-change money involved the former Manhattan law firm of Buckley, Kisseloff & Lobell.

One member of the now-dissolved law firm, Samuel J. Kisseloff, has testified before the grand jury. He is said to have told the jury that he met with Mr. Groh on Feb. 25 and April 26, 1972, in Mr. Groh's office and that Mr. Groh proposed that the Sheraton Corporation buy $20,000 in $100-a-plate tickets to Mr. Manes's dinner.

Mr. Kisseloff, who is 49 years old, is believed to be well connected with Democrats in the city. His late law partner, Charles Buckley Jr., was the son of the late Bronx Democratic leader.

According to investigations familiar with the grand jury testimony, Mr. Kisseloff testified that at least four payments, totaling $10,721, were made through checks bearing his law firm's name; two checks totaling $4,333 were made directly in behalf of Mr. Manes's fund-raising committee; a check of $3,000 was made payable to Mr. Fitzgerald, the Manhattan public administrator, and a fourth check of $3,388 was made payable to Sheldon Lobell, a partner in the law firm.

It is not clear whether all the money went to the fund-raising dinner. Investigators said they believed the law firm planned to make the payments to the dinner indirectly through different people to avoid disclosing a single $10,000 contribution from one firm.

The Sheraton Corporation won approval from the Board of Estimate for the zoning change on July 20, 1972, but it later dropped the expansion project and sold the inn.

Mr. Groh's lawyer, Mr. Segal, said that Mr. Groh was independently wealthy and that there was no hint "that he personally took any money."

Mr. Groh testified last month before the grand jury, waiving his right to immunity from prosecution, and he reportedly said he had no recollection of having met Mr. Kisseloff.

L.I. Park Supervisor Is Convicted of Extortion

eliberated for three days before its verdict. The panel an- ts agreement late yesterday r-week trial during which five operators had testified that paid the park official $1,000 several years and $1,500 a ng in 1971 to get the exclusive towing franchises for sections of Long Island parkways.

Mr. McGrath had testified that the operators had lied and that he had not received anything.

Close Friends

The trial also produced the disclosure that the former Park Commission official was the joint owner with a woman of $25,000 in saving certificates. But the woman, Anne McKeen, bursar of the State University of New York campus at Stony Brook, told the court that she had put together money from several of her bank accounts to buy the certificates.

Miss McKeen said she had been for a long time a close friend of Mr. McGrath, that she had traveled with him and that she had made him joint owner of the certificates because she wanted him to have the money in the event she died.

"I have no one else," she told the court.

Miss McKeen's name had come up early in the trial when witnesses said she had been present at parties Mr. McGrath had held for tow-truck operators at his summer home at Amagansett, L.I.

Concerning the charge that he had failed to report $75,000 in income, Mr. McGrath had said he had not reported interest on one bank account because it had been held in trust for his daughter. Another of the accounts in question, he said, was a time-saving account and he believed he had to report the interest only when he withdrew the money.

await the outcome before deciding whether to look into the matter."

Herald Price Fahringer, the lawyer who represented the Assembly Speaker and the City Councilman, said he doubted there would be further prosecution.

"The charge is tenuous," he said, "and I can't believe any other District Attorney will be so brazen as to present it to a grand jury."

According to the indictments, handed up about a year ago, the Speaker and his son, who was then a candidate for Councilman at Large from Brooklyn, agreed to obtain an honorary city job for Hans Rubenfeld, a Bronx haberdasher, in return for a contribution of $2,500 toward Robert Steingut's campaign for the city council post.

At a news conference, Mr. Gold, describing the dismissed indictments, sketched out a series of meetings in 1973 that he said had led to the $2,500 payment.

He reported that mutual friends had been said to have arranged the first meeting—a luncheon on ept. 10 at Ratner's Restaurant on Delancey Street attended by both Steinguts, Mr. Rubenfeld and two other persons.

On Oct. 27, the second meeting, according to Mr. Gold, took place at a dinner honoring the elder Mr. Steingut. "The first payment of $1,500 changed hands at this meeting," Mr. Gold said.

The additional $1,000 was said by Mr. Gold to have been turned over to Robert Steingut at a third meeting, following his election to office, and that this is believrd to have taken place at the Grand Brokerage insurance firm at 170 Broadway.

The insurance firm, in which the elder Steingut and Meade H. Esposito, the Democratic Kings County chairman, had been partners, was used from time to time by Robert Steingut.

Although, according to Mr. Gold, Mr. Rubenfeld carried out his end of the bargain by making the campaign contribution, he never received the job he had wanted—that of adviser to the Civilian Complaint Review Board of the New York City Police Department.

As a result, either Mr. Rubenfeld or one of his friends complained in October 1975 to the Brooklyn District Attorney.

3 Experts Testify at Bronfman Trial

By M. A. FARBER
Special to The New York Times

WHITE PLAINS, Nov. 15—Experts called today by the prosecution in the Bronfman kidnapping trial said they were unable to identify "positively" the typewriter used for the ransom letter and the machine that made certain tapes that figured in the case.

James E. Lile, a document examiner for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, said, however, that a Smith-Corona typewriter found in the basement of the apartment building of Dominic P. Byrne, one of the defendants, "could have been used" to prepare the ransom letter sent to Edgar Bronfman, chairman of the board of Seagram Distillers.

And James Reams, a tape-recorder expert for the F.B.I., said he "believed" that a Panasonic recorder turned over to law-enforcement officials by Mr. Byrne's wife, Elizabeth, had been used to make the recordings that were mailed to Mr. Bronfman after his 21-year-old son, Samuel, was allegedly kidnapped on Aug. 8, 1975. The recordings were of the younger Mr. Bronfman's voice.

Mr. Reams said the "magnetic characteristics" on the tapes were "consistent" with markings made by this machine. But he said it was "within the realm of possibility" that another Panasonic of the same model could have made the same imprints.

Mr. Byrne, a 54-year-old limousine service operator, and Mel Patrick Lynch, a 39-year-old New York City fireman, are accused of abducting young Bronfman and holding him captive in Mr. Lynch's apartment in Brooklyn for nine days. The two men, who pleaded not guilty, face a minimum of 15 years imprisonment if convicted.

In other testimony on the 21st day of the trial, an F.B.I. fingerprint expert said that 55 prints lifted for evidence—none of them made by the defendants or by the alleged victim—had not been checked for identification against the 160 million prints in the F.B.I.'s files because the task was not technically feasible and "might have taken my lifetime."

Roy McDaniel, the fingerprint expert, said he had not been asked to check whether two or more of the 55 prints had been made by the same person.

Mr. McDaniel had testified earlier that he found 11 prints traceable to Mr. Lynch —eight on carbon and tissue paper discovered in Mr. Lynch's apartment and two on the defendant's cars—and one print of Samuel Bronfman lifted from the BMW automobile from which he was allegedly abducted. No prints of Mr. Byrne were found.

None of the prints found on the Smith-Corona typewriter or a .38-caliber revolver allegedly used by Mr. Lynch in the kidnaping was identified.

SEARCH ACCOUNT ANGERS DOCTOR IN MURDER TRIAL

MINEOLA, L.I., Nov. 15 (UPI)—Dr. Charles E. Friedgood, on trial for the murder of his wife, reddened in anger today during testimony by a former detective who helped intercept the physician and take him from a plane at Kennedy International Airport.

It was the first time the 57-year-old physician had shown any emotion at the six-week trial.

The former detective for the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, Walter Sheppard, was on the stand describing how he had searched a black bag that Dr. Friegood was carrying at Kennedy Airport on June 25, 1975. Mr. Sheppard told the prosecutor, Stephen P. Scaring, that he had "opened the bag, looked in and ran my hands through the contents."

Suddenly Dr. Friedgood, his face reddening in anger, dropped a pencil on the defense table and shook his head in disagreement. Then he turned to one of his attorneys, John Palmer, and made motions with his hands to indicate that Mr. Sheppard had turned the bag upside down and emptied everything out of it.

Following this uncharacteristic show of temperament, Dr. Friedgood settled back in his chair and resumed the withdrawn behavior he has shown throughout the trial.

Mr. Sheppard testified that he had discovered "papers, stocks and bonds" in the bag, but he made no mention of 35 pieces of jewelry that had been mentioned earlier as part of the contents.

"How would you like to retire on $949,036.43?"

—Joe DiMaggio

If you're self-employed, The Bowery can show how you could build up a whopping nest egg for the future—and take a tax deduction* of up to $7500 every year.

Are you a physician, dentist, lawyer, accountant, salesman, writer, operator of an unincorporated business or member of a partnership?

The Bowery can help you salt away nearly a million dollars by the time you retire. Here's how:

December 31 deadline

The Bowery will set up a tax-favored* retirement plan. We serve as trustee and depository for your Retirement Account.

You are allowed to put 15% of your earned income, up to a maximum of $7500 a year, into your account. This money is tax deductible* on your 1976 return.

Tax is deferred until retirement or age 70½, when you will probably be in a lower tax bracket.

You may continue to make contributions to your account until your 1976 income tax is due—if you start your plan by December 31.

How the money adds up

When you make a contribution to your Retirement Account you can get our highest rate—7.75% a year. The annual yield is 8.17% with daily compounding. This is guaranteed on 6-7 year accounts of $1000 or more.

Based on our current 6-7 year rate, annual contributions of $7500 would give you $949,036.43 after 30 years. Future rates may be higher or lower than those presently available.

Permitted premature withdrawals are subject to substantial penalties.

Note: If you supplement regular income with self-employed work, you can also set money aside. See The Bowery for details.

Prefer to start an Individual Retirement Account?

A Bowery I.R.A. plan permits you to save up to $1500 a year (tax deductible). Amounts contributed together with interest earned accumulate tax free until you retire.

Call The Bowery's Retirement Plan Dept. at (212) 953-8334 for details or mail the coupon below.

Rosenbaum to Remain Chairman Of the G.O.P. in New York State

By MAURICE CARROLL

Richard M. Rosenbaum ruled out yesterday his rumored ambition to run for Governor and said that he would remain as Republican chairman of New York State through the 1978 election.

His decision, announced after a meeting of party leaders in the Manhattan office of Vice President Rockefeller, ended an effort to give his job to the Nassau County chairman, Joseph M. Margiotta.

Mr. Rosenbaum, who has an explosive manner of speaking, a bouncily outgoing personality and a totally bald head that shines under television lights, has won far more public attenton that most people in party jobs.

But private soundings among state politicians over the last several days convinced him that it would be hard to translate that recognition into a nomination for Governor for himself and harder still to sell the self-confident Mr. Margiotta to party leaders as his replacement.

So yesterday the leaders gathered in the Rockefeller office on West 55th Street and ratified a pair of decisions that had, in effect, already been reached.

Urgings to Remain

"Since news of my desire to resign began to appear in the press," Mr. Rosenbaum said in a statement circulated after the meeting, "I have been strongly urged by the Vice President and other leaders and members of the party, and especially Joe Margiotta, to stay on as chairman for the municipal elections in 1977 and the statewide campaign of 1978. In response to their wishes, I have decided to do so."

Since running for Governor would be "inconsistent with my responsibility as state chairman," he said, he "made the conscious choice not to seek the gubernatorial nomination."

Mr. Margiotta let it be known later, through a spokesman, that he was "delighted that Dick has decided to stay on as state chairman, because he's done a helluva job."

George L. Clark Jr., the Brooklyn chairman, who battled bitterly with Mr. Rosenbaum at the Republican National Convention, said that he was "thrilled" at Mr. Rosenbaum's decision. "It would be difficult for anyone to replace him," Mr. Clark said. He said that the party needed a chairman with "pizzazz" and that Mr. Rosenbaum had it.

Earlier Success Upstate

Mr. Rosenbaum, 45 years old, was a State Supreme Court justice in 1972 when then-Governor Rockefeller picked him to lead the state party. Before becoming a judge, he had led the Monroe County party to great success, filling the County Legislature with Republicans, winning back control of the Rochester city government. As state chairman, a fulltime $50,000-a-year job, he has been less successful since Mr. Rockefeller moved up to national office. The party lost the governorship and control of the Assembly in 1974 and this year it lost a United States Senate seat.

But Mr. Rosenbaum, in his statement, spoke optimistically of taking back the Governor's office and the Assembly.

The Vice President, former Gov. Malcolm Wilson, Mr. Rosenbaum, Mr. Margiotta, George Hinman, a long-time Rockefeller adviser, Warren M. Anderson, majority leader of the State Senate, and Assemblyman Dominick L. DiCarlo, a stand-in for Perry B. Duryea, the Assembly minority leader, attended yesterday's brief meeting.

In a statement issued later, Mr. Rockefeller said: "All of us in the Republican Party are delighted. It is reassuring to know that a man of his character, integrity and leadership is continuing to serve."

Technically, the state committee picks the chairman. Actually, the choice has been Mr. Rockefeller's for the 18 years that he has dominated the state party.

Vital Services' Aid Called Declining

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN

A special mayoral commission yesterday issued a report showing that New York City spends proportionately less money today than it did 15 years ago on vital city services—such as police, fire and sanitation—and that this trend had been "counter-productive" for the city's future.

The 94-page report from the Temporary Commission on City Finances, the eighth in a series of studies, also found that the city spent somewhat more per capita than other local governments for vital services, and substantially more than other localities for welfare, higher education and hospitals.

The commission's findings were not surprising to city officials, but they did document in unusual detail the trends that many experts have been pointing to at least since the beginning of the city's budget crisis two years ago.

However, the commission, which was appointed by Mayor Beame to study the long-term prospects of the city's finances, stopped short of making any politically sensitive recommendations about cutting back on hospitals and higher education—two services, it said, that are not offered elsewhere to the extent they are offered here.

Instead, the commission said its results "raise important policy questions" for the city as Mayor Beame embarks on a new round of drastic spending cuts to close a $500 million budget deficit in the fiscal year beginning next July 1, the third and final year of its recovery plan.

Raymond D. Horton, staff director for the commission, said subsequent reports would look at different city services to determine whether spending was too high for any of them.

"This study," Mr. Horton said, "was aimed at identifying the areas that represent our biggest problems to give us a framework for our later reports."

Between 1961 and 1976, the commission found, the share of city spending for police, fire, sanitation and education declined from 46 to 30 percent, while the share for welfare, hospitals and higher education rose from 22 percent to 37 percent.

The reason given for this overall shift by the commission was the changing demographic pattern in New York City, as well as the incentive to spend for social welfare programs provided by state and Federal grant programs. But the commission also said that the city had chosen to spend more in the last 15 years for hospitals and social services because of political pressures.

'Clearly Siphoned Off'

"Clearly," the report said, "police, fire, sanitation and education resources were siphoned off in favor, particularly, of welfare and higher education."

Even when compared to total spending by all levels of local government in other parts of the country—including counties and special districts—New York City ranked "very high" in spending for higher education, hospitals and welfare, according to the report.

The report also established eight categories of functions common to the country's 26 largest cities and found that New York City ranked fourth in per capita expenditures for these—trailing Washington, Baltimore and Seattle.

New York City, it said, was seventh in per capita police expenditures, ninth in fire expenditures, third in sanitation and 15th in parks and recreation, the only category in which the city equalled the average of the other 25 cities.

BUDGET UP SLIGHTLY FOR WESTCHESTER

County Executive Requests a Small Rise in Spending for 1977—No Welfare Increase Asked

By THOMAS P. RONAN
Special to The New York Times

WHITE PLAINS, Nov. 15—Alfred B. DelBello, the County Executive, requested today a 1977 Westchester budget that included a relatively small increase over the current year, a slight decrease in the county's average property tax and a pledge not to increase welfare spending next year "by a single cent" over this year's figure.

In his message to the Board of Legislators, he asked for a budget increase of $23.2 million, to $399.3 million, or less than 6.2 percent, which budget officials said was the smallest percentage increase in more than 10 years.

For welfare services, the biggest item in the budget and one that has been soaring, he asked $207.583 million, the same as this year's figure. But he conceded that if that amount did not meet the state requirements on mandated programs the state might take the county to court to force it to appropriate additional sums for welfare.

In that event, the increases would have to be met from reductions in other county programs or operations. He said his administration would not resort to borrowing or tax increases to defray these costs, nor would it countenance a deficit for 1977.

Mr. DelBello recalled that he and the board, which can raise or lower his budget, had said earlier this year they would not increase welfare spending. In keeping with that pledge, he said, he has rejected a request by the Social Services Department for an additional $12 million to "meet the anticipated increase in the cost of programs mandated by the state and Federal governments."

"The decision was founded on the belief that the combined effect of the welfare reforms proposed by Governor Carey, the benefits of an improved economy and the county's cost-reduction efforts will offset the projected cost increases in mandated programs," he declared.

On taxes, Mr. DelBello projected substantially increased revenues next year and proposed a reduction of 7 cents in the county's average property tax to bring it to $22.13 for each $100 of assessed valuation. But he agreed in response to questions at a news conference that the tax might actually go up for some property owners.

This tax is based on the complicated formula known as the statistical tax ratio that includes not only the property assessments made by local communities but also an equalization factor designed to take into account whether these assessments are made on the full sales value of property or only a percentage of it.

Some Republicans here saw the 42-year-old County Executive's budget proposal as, in effect, a campaign platform on which he could run next year, when his four-year term expires. Mr. DelBello, the first Democrat ever elected to the county post, said today he had "every intention of running again" for a second term.

Suffolk Legislature Approves $578 Million Budg

By ARI L. GOLDMAN
Special to The New York Times

HAUPPAUGE, L.I., Nov. 15—The Suffolk County Legislature, adding $1.7 million to the budget of the County Executive, John V. N. Klein, adopted today a $578 million budget for 1977.

The new budget will result in a property tax rate of about $3.06 per $100 of assessed valuation—an increase for homeowners of as much as 79 cents over last year. The county tax accounts for about only 10 percent of the total tax bill for residents, with the remainder consisting of school, town and special district taxes.

The final action on the budget came today in a special meeting of the Democratic-controlled Legislature, which was called to vote on a bid to override the budget vetoes of the County Executive, who is a Republican. Last week, after the Legislature added $7 million to Mr. Klein's budget, the County Executive vetoed all but $400,000 of their additions.

The Democrats succeeded today in mustering a two-thirds majority of the 18-member Legislature to restore vetoed items in health care, social services and cultural affairs. Vetoes in other areas—principally $4.2 million for the county police—were not overridden.

Difference in Cost Cited

The Legislature's action in adding $1.7 million to the budget meant an increase in the property tax rate of about 10 cents per $100 of assessed valuation, according to Floyd S. Linton, presiding officer of the Legislature. The adoption of the Legislature's total $7 million package, Mr. Linton said in his budget message last week, would have meant an increase of 32 cents.

Mr. Linton said that even though the Legislature was unable to overri veto of the County Executive on th jority of the items, it had fulfill role in "identifying for the public deficiencies and budgetary problem existed in the Executive's budget."

He said that the Legislature had Mr. Klein the opportunity to restore deficiencies and now the County E tive would have to take the respons for them.

Mr. Klein, who seemed pleased the Legislature had made only min justments in his budget, saw it a dif way.

"The Legislature essentially agreed roughly 99 percent of the bud presented them with," he said.

The Legislature will meet next Tu to vote on a tentative contract settl with the county's 6,500 Civil Servic ployeees, which was also vetoed b Klein.

One to grow with.

"We'll buy a cheaper piano. Then if she stays with it we can always buy a Steinway."

It sounds logical. And yet...

If you take her ambition seriously enough to buy the Steinway,® will she take it more seriously herself?

If you buy the cheaper piano will she hear and feel what a piano is truly capable of? Will she develop the musical values necessary to move ahead?

Is the cheaper piano really more affordable? Your Steinway dealer or an astute banker can surprise you on that score.

Buy the Steinway and you have selected the finest instrument of its kind... the one found in conservatories and practice rooms everywhere... a piano she can start with, grow with, and stay with even after her debut... and, a piano that will suffer less depreciation than the cheaper piano, should she lose interest and you decide to sell.

The least expensive piano isn't always the least expensive piano.

These conversations resulted in the indictments against the 13 nursing-home officials.

In 11 other cases, suppliers who allegedly had discussed kickbacks with Mr. Feinberg denied any knowledge of illegal propositions, and they were indicted on perjury charges that carry a maximum seven-year prison sentence.

Twenty of those indicted surrendered yesterday morning to the special prosecutor. Six others, not yet named, are expected to surrender "within the next day or two," Mr. Hynes said.

Those who surrendered yesterday were:

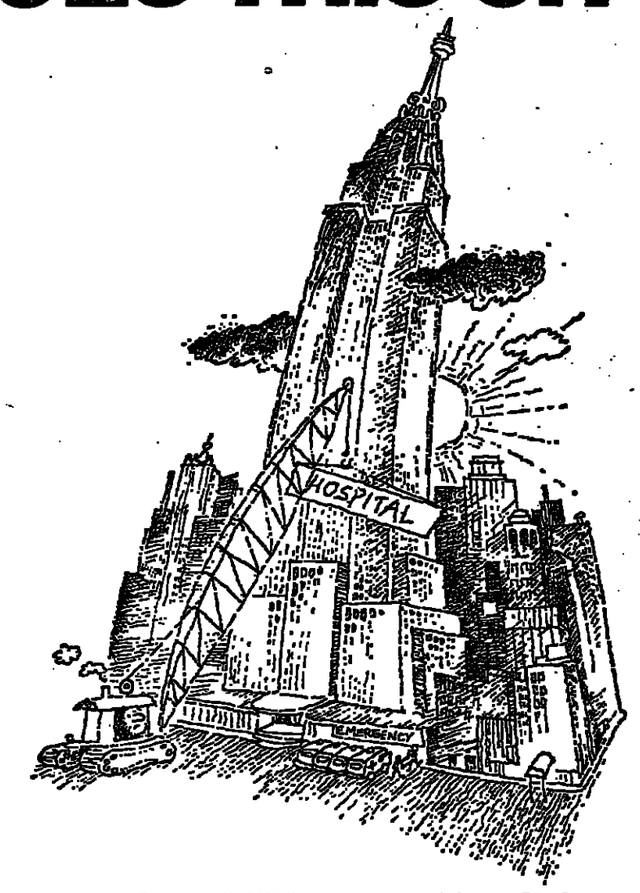
JUST HOW MUCH HOSPITAL DOES THIS CITY NEED?



We may have 4,500 unneeded hospital beds now. And there are more a-building.

We at Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York believe many of these new beds are unnecessary.

And some new technical facilities being installed may be redundant.

We think that new facilities should be planned. And present duplication should be eliminated...whether in New York City or any other county in our downstate area.

We want everyone to get care—quality care—when it's needed.

As long as there's costly duplication, it can put strains on the quality of care, by spreading it too thin.

We believe in eliminating surplus hospital beds. We have argued in favor of this for years. We're happy to see it happening now.

After all, an empty bed costs about 70% as much to maintain as one that's occupied, and it tends to encourage unnecessary treatment.

We have spoken longer and more strongly than any other organization in New York State in our effort to control present surpluses and avoid future ones.

But much more must be done, and it requires public support. We are asking that you be informed, involved, and hopefully, support our efforts and those of others to correct the situation.

Sophisticated facilities: more can be less. We've seen a trend toward proliferation of facilities for open-heart surgery and kidney transplants. We've worked to control that proliferation.

Certainly, we want to save and prolong lives. But again, let's emphasize quality.

These delicate operations are best concentrated in units with the most experience: an under-used facility may deliver care of lesser quality at higher cost.

"CAT's" that cost $400,000 to $700,000. Ever hear of the CAT Scanner? (CAT= computerized axial tomography.)

It's a complex new device that can scan the brain or whole body with x-rays, then produce a computerized picture for doctors and CAT specialists to analyze.

It's a super x-ray.

It can detect certain trouble spots with remarkable clarity and efficiency. It may be the greatest new diagnostic tool in years.

On the other hand, some of its analyses can be done as effectively with existing equipment.

And its cost is enormous.

We're worried that too many physicians and facilities in the city are going to run out and buy one.

We've requested stronger legislation to deter that proliferation: Governor Carey has supported the urgent need for such a law. Again, carefully controlled installations may deliver higher quality at less cost than if they are permitted to simply proliferate.

Who's paying? You. Remember this.

You pay the health care bill. Whether in direct charges, taxes, or the cost of your health care plan.

That's why we need your interest and support.

We don't think you can afford to be indifferent.

Selection Board Rejects 3 Sites for OTB Parlors After Residents Protest

The Offtrack Betting Corporation suffered an upset yesterday when the Mayor and the city's Site Selection Board bowed to community pressures and turned down three sites proposed for OTB parlors in the Bronx, Brooklyn and Queens.

After the board had unanimously rejected the sites, Robert Abrams, Bronx Borough President, said it was "a true victory for the communities." He added: "It's reassuring for those of us who live miles away from the downtown bureaucracy to discover that occasionally the bureaucracy does listen."

The proposed Bronx site was on Riverdale Avenue between 259th and 260th Streets, across from a church and between a public school and a parochial school. The Mayor received 1,200 letters opposing the Queens site, on Fresh Pond Road between 68th Avenue and Madison Street in Ridgewood. The residents near the third site, in Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, at Fifth Avenue between 71st and 72d Streets, were equally adamant in their opposition.

At a board meeting a month ago, OTB officials estimated that the three new parlors would bring in a total of $935,000 a year in new revenues to the financially hard-pressed city. But community leaders protested strongly, contending that the parlors would result in increased traffic congestion and streets littered with losing tickets.

Glenn Holmes, bartender, San Diego.

Slightly Sour is a light but lively cocktail that's slightly less sour, slightly less sweet. The professional bartenders who tasted it had to admit it was the most exciting drink since the whisky sour. No other mix, wet or dry, can match the fresh, fruity taste of Bar-Tender's Slightly Sour. Give an ounce of pure gold for Christmas.

It hasn't been long that Americans have been allowed to own gold in any form they choose.

So, what would be a more appreciated gift than an ounce of that precious metal—mounted as a piece of jewelry, such as the pendant shown here.

The gold coin you see here is the South African Krugerrand. And it is not only exquisite, it is also unique among the coins of all nations.

Instead of a fractional amount, it contains exactly one troy ounce of pure gold.

And its value is not stated in any single currency denomination, such as dollars, francs, etc., but is based on the actual world ounce-price of gold. (Thus it will always be worth what an ounce of gold is worth.)

You can buy the Krugerrand at banks, brokerage firms and coin dealers. And many jewelers offer a choice of mountings, including gifts for men such as money clips.

You could give it to an adult who may remember the last time he or she could own gold. Or, to a child, or even a grandchild, who never has known pure gold.

But no matter whom you choose to give it to, it is a gift that will be remembered. For gold is enduring.

And it is also a gift that recalls the first Christmas—when Wise Men came bearing gifts of frankincense and myrrh. And gold.

New York Extends Instant Lottery; Tickets for New Game on Sale

By PETER KIHSS

New York State's instant lottery will be extended to Dec. 21 instead of ending Nov. 26 as scheduled, it was announced yesterday. A top price of $980,000 was set for the new weekly lottery for which 50-cent tickets go on sale today.

John D. Quinn, the lottery director, said that both games would run concurrently until Dec. 21.

The instant game was to have been suspended during the running of the new weekly Holiday Empire Stakes. The new lottery is to pay out $1.4 million in prizes that were held back a year ago when the former lottery was halted because of mismanagement.

The $980,000 prize, Mr. Quinn said, will be "the largest single prize award given in a lump sum from any lottery in the country." However, the commission said that the new Federal Tax Reform Act required an immediate withholding of 20 percent of all gambling winnings above $5,000 for Federal income taxes.

Elimination of Taxes Urged

This indicates that $196,000 would be withheld at once. The winner's total Federal liability would depend on his ability to use legal devices such as income-tax averaging. Otherwise the Federal tax for a single person could be as high as $669,090, and on a joint return could rise to $656,980.

Mr. Quinn said he would ask the State Legislature to eliminate state and local taxes on lottery winnings on the ground that they came from "expenditure of disposable income which has already been taxed." He noted that a Federal commission had recommended elimination of Federal taxes on gambling winnings.

The lottery commission would not estimate how much state and local tax revenue might be affected. The state hopes to raise $60 million from its 45 percent of gross sales for the year ending March 31. This would indicate that the winners' 40 percent share would be $53 million.

State taxes range from 2 to 15 percent of taxable income, and New York City's local tax on residents' income this year is to be 0.9 to 4.3 percent.

Earlier this year the state decided to pay out four $125,000 prizes and one $100,000 prize from last year's proceeds in installments over a 10-year period—but received complaints from winners, who wanted their total prizes at once.

The $1 instant lottery sold 86 million tickets through Oct. 28. Mr. Quinn said that several million tickets were still on sale as potential winners. As of Nov. 10, he said, still to be claimed were 51 jackpots ($1,000 a week for life with a $1 million guarantee), 162 grocery winnings worth $2,500 each, 93 $5,000 prizes and thousands of others.

The weekly game will have drawings every Friday, except for Christmas Eve Friday, when it will be delayed until Dec. 27. There will be 8,000 $20 prizes and 12 $3,000 prizes for each million tickets sold. One of every million tickets will have a number for a $980,000 drawing in January, when 29 runners-up will get about $14,000 each.

Transcript of a News Conference Held by President-Elect Carter in Ge

Following is a transcript of President-elect Jimmy Carter's news conference yesterday afternoon in Plains, Ga., as recorded by The New York Times through the facilities of ABC News. Because some questions were partly inaudible, they have been paraphrased in the transcript by The Times and The Associated Press.

OPENING STATEMENT

I'm glad to have you all here. I noticed the number of cars outside was two or three times larger than my total audience was a couple of years ago.

The first indication of the character of the next Administration will be the quality of top officials who are chosen to serve with me and Senator Mondale. This will obviously be one of the most important tasks for us prior to the inauguration. I would like to outline for you today in general terms the process that we are using to select men and women for top positions in the next Administration. The process will be similar to the one that I used in choosing Senator Mondale as the Vice-Presidential nominee.

Although I'm eager to identify and to reveal to the public my designees in these major positions as early as possible, I'm also much more concerned with assuring that the process be thorough enough to insure that the best person in the country is chosen for each position. So we will be careful and thorough and deliberate in making these major decisions.

I've asked Senator Mondale to work closely with me in the entire process. I will ask for his recommendations in filling each position and I will also consult with him as we evaluate persons who are recommended for these positions.

A list of people who should be considered for each position is already being developed; some of them are already obvious to me from those I've known in the campaign and before, but there will be an intensive search to insure that throughout the country I have available to me recommendations of those that I might not have known in the past. I solicit these recommendations from all interested citizens.

In addition, though, Senator Mondale and I have already begun to call and to consult with distinguished Americans to seek their advice and suggestions on those who should be considered for these major posts. This consultation process will continue until all appointees are chosen.

Some Names This Week

Later this week I will announce to the press the names of some of those who are helping us to identify and evaluate persons who should be considered for these positions. Members of this group will function as individuals, not as a body, providing us directly with their own thoughts and suggestions. Some of those who will be consulting with me in a very extensive way prefer that their names not be revealed other than giving me permission to reveal their names as part of the process.

In order to assure maximum personal knowledge of the qualifications and compatibility of persons with whom I'm not familiar, they will be asked to join with me and with Senator Mondale and with my staff in evaluating projects or proposed legislation that will be important as an elemental portion of the next Administration. We will evaluate information that is presented to us and we'll compare it with our own personal assessments of the persons being considered.

I will personally interview the selections for the major posts and Senator Mondale will help me in that process. The press and the American people will, of course, know the identity of those with whom I meet, but you probably will not always know for what position they are being considered.

After proper consultation with Congressional leaders and after security checks have been completed and reviewed by me, I will then make my decisions known to the American people. In each instance, the security check will not be conducted without the permission of that person being investigated.

I'm sure that you realize that there will be inevitable speculation about who I am considering and who I will select. But just as in the Vice-Presidential selection process, no one on my staff, no one in my family is authorized to speak on my behalf about possible appointees during this discussion period. I have not made a decision up until this point about any of these appointees. When I make my final decision then I will make a public announcement. And once that decision has been made I will make the announcement as expeditiously as possible.

As some of you learned while I was choosing a Vice-Presidential running mate, often those who talk the most know the least.

Senator Mondale will be assisting me, staying mostly in Washington although he will be coming down tomorrow night to work with me on this process. He'll be meeting with Congressional leaders on Wednesday and he will be with me on Friday for a C.I.A. briefing and throughout this whole interim period. Although his normal base of operations will be in Washington, he and I will be together often.

The staff work for this process will be coordinated by Hamilton Jordan, who will be located in Washington.

I'll be glad to answer questions about this or any other items.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

1. Getting More Jobs

Q. Governor, eight million Americans are out of work. You said during the campaign that your No. 1 priority was getting people back to work. Can you be specific now about what you're going to do about it. And further, whether you can do this without new inflation?

A. Well, I can't be more specific now than I was in the campaign. I have been meeting with and talking with people since the election to put into more concrete terms my own proposals for the next Administration.

On Wednesday, I will be meeting with about a dozen of the top Democratic Congressional leaders from both houses, leaders who have been chosen by the Speaker of the House and by the majority leader in the Senate.

I've been making arrangements this morning to meet with distinguished business leaders. My intention is to go to Washington next week to spend a couple of days meeting with Mr. Arthur Burns and with members of the present Cabinet and with others. But I think until I have a clearer concept about legislation to be proposed and the priority of proposals to be made that don't require legislation, it would be inappropriate for me to make interim announcements.

I understand that President Ford himself—and I did not get this information from him—will wait until possibly the first or second week in December, until economic indicators are available to him, before he makes a statement about the economy. But I'm not qualified at this point to present any definitive solution to the unemployment question.

As far as the inflationary aspect of efforts made to reduce unemployment, I think that this is one that I've covered before. We have now approximately 70 percent of our industrial capacity being used; which means that 30 percent or so is not being used. With eight million people unemployed, that's another tremendous untapped reservoir of workers and capacity that can be tapped before you have pressures of an inflationary type.

In addition to that, by targeting specific programs in a counter-cyclical fashion in communities or among groups who have the highest unemployment, the aspect of inflation that derives from employment efforts could be minimized. We believe that we can get the unemployment rate down over a fairly long period of time—two, three or perhaps four years—to the 4 to 4½ percent figure before excessive inflation pressures will be felt.

But I will reveal my plans as they are evolved. They are not final enough now to discuss further.

2. Tax Cut Possibility

Q. Could you get a tax cut through Congress in light of reservations expressed by Arthur Burns, by Chairman Reuss of the Banking Committee and by Chairman Ullman of House Ways and Means Committee, and would you be attempting or have you decided to call for a tax cut in terms of a permanent tax reduction or a one-time tax rebate?

A. Again, I can't make a judgment on that until I see what the economic circumstances are at the end of the next two months, but we will be evolving alternative plans; some will probably involve the possibility of a tax reduction—that's not a final decision yet—and then, depending upon which aspect of the economy needs the greatest stimulation, or exactly which taxpayers should be benefitted and whether it should be a one-shot tax rebate or a continued process—that would also be decided in the future. I can't give that answer yet.

3. Contact With Arthur Burns

Q. What do you want to discuss with these businessmen and what do you want to discuss with Arthur Burns?

A. I've had communications from Mr. Burns, who pledges cooperation with me during the next Administration. I understand the autonomy of the Federal Reserve System and would not like to eliminate that autonomy. I would like to get it first-hand, a report from Mr. Burns about his prospects for next year, the amount of, the rate of increase of money availability for the next 12 months. I would like for him to repeat to me the appropriate parts of his testimony recently given to Senator Proxmire.

And, I've never met Mr. Burns; I would like very much for me and him to have a chance to discuss our relative attitudes toward the economy during my Administration. I think that we will find a substantial degree of compatibility. I have a great admiration for him. I think he's highly professional. I think in every instance, so far as I know, he's acted in what he thought was the best interest of our country, and we will discuss, I think, at length, the economic circumstances. And I can seem to detect the degree of compatability and the degrees of differences.

If there are differences, then I would have to decide what to do about increase in the supply of money. This can be done, as you know, through tax rebates which would require the cooperation and action of Congress, or in the preparation of my own budget that I will present to Congress as an amendment to the one that President Ford is now proposing. But there are three instances in our economic structure relatively independent one from another: the President, the Congress and the Federal Reserve which is, each one of which has to be involved in overall economic decisions. They can't act independently.

As far as the business leaders are concerned, I will be asking them for their advice on Cabinet appointees. I will also be asking them for their constant input into the next Administration on economic matters, their cooperation in the evolution and consummation of informant legislation. I'd like to have their advice on tax matters and I will, of course, be consulting with labor leaders and others along with the business leaders.

4. Meeting With Businessmen

Q. Can you tell us any of the people you will meet with?

A. I will be having a meeting tonight at my home with one of the Georgia businessmen who is helping to put together the meeting. One of them who has contacted me is the chairman of the board of Coca-Cola Company and I will be meeting tonight with Burt Lance. Paul Austin is the chairman of the Coca-Cola board. But I've had invitations from others, particularly in New York, to give them a chance to meet with me—a group of business leaders—and I would like to honor that request along with the requests of other groups in the country who have contacted me.

5. The Future of Burns

Q. Would you anticipate, sir, in your meeting with Mr. Burns, making any suggestion of any kind that he step aside as chairman so that you can bring in your chairman?

A. I think that decision on my part could best be made after I meet with Mr. Burns. He's announced that he's not going to step down and my first inclination, of course, would be to work with him harmoniously and to let him stay on as chairman. I have said in the past that I prefer to have the chairmanship of the Federal Reserve Board coterminus with the term of the President; I still feel that way and will seek legislation to that degree. But I would guess that I can work well with Mr. Burns if he should stay on as chairman, which I think is the most likely prospect.

6. Postponement of Reforms

Q. Is the economic situation so critical from what you can tell so far that you might perhaps want to sidetrack or postpone your major reform proposals in the tax area and the bureaucracy? A. No. Q.—to concentrate on whatever to help the economy?

A. No. I don't see any incompatibility among them. I think one of the reasons that our Government has been ineffective in dealing with unemployment and with inflation and with an absence of proper delivery of services to the welfare, health and other areas—transportation, energy—is because of the bloated and uncontollable bureaucracy.

And I intend to pursue aggressively the promises that I have made to the American people. One of the subjects of discussion on Wednesday with the Democratic Congressional leaders will be the complete reorganization of the executive branch of Government.

I've already had assurances given to me by some of the Republican leaders. I noticed Congressman Anderson on the television this morning said that that would be one area where he felt that we would have unanimous support from Republican members of Congress.

But in welfare reform, in tax reform, in comprehensive health care—I would not defer those because of the problem with unemployment and inflation. I think they're interrelated. And even if they were not, I think that I would have a broad-based enough opportunity as President to deal with them simultaneously.

7. Atoms and Human Rights

Q. What do you intend to do in the area of nuclear agreements and human rights?

A. Yes, I think that my statements on those matters have been fairly well spelled out in several speeches I've made that were given careful consideration by me. Particularly in the reduction of atomic weapons, the control of nuclear waste materials and the nonproliferation of the capability for atomic explosions.

I will pursue through normal diplomatic channels and through normal diplomatic persuasion my hope that the sale of plutonium reprocessing plants by both Germany and France might be abrogated and not be carried to conclusion. The information that I have, which is unofficial and has been made public, is that in at least one of those instances there is a good chance that this might be successful.

As far as the human rights issue is concerned, this is an all-pervasive problem throughout the world. It does apply in some instances, for instance, to Chile, to which you did refer. I think here again the attitude of our nation's people and our Government toward another foreign government like Chile's would be very seriously affected by an absence of concern for human rights.

At the present time—in this past year—my understanding is that we've given to Chile, for instance, more than 80 percent of the total Food for Peace allocations that went to the entire Southern Hemisphere—in Central and South America. And I think about the same amount in housing construction funds.

So I think the allocation of foreign aid and the normal friendship of our country would be determined or affected certainly by the attitude of those countries toward human rights.

Yes, sir.

8. Dealing With Soviet Union

Q. What are the plans your Administration has for dealing with the Soviet Union.

A. Well, I want to remind you again of a statement that I made at the last press conference: I'm not President. We have a Government in place that's perfectly capable of representing our nation and I don't want any of my responses to insinuate that I'm trying to act as President or that my representatives are representing the American Government.

The Soviet Union, I think, is the key to the reduction of atomic weaponry, and I have read very carefully the recent speeches made by Mr. Brezhnev and the statement that was submitted to the United Nations by Mr. Gromyko concerning reduction in dependence, for instance, upon atomic weapons. When I become President then I will pursue those possibilities for the lessening of dependence on atomic weapons aggressively.

As far as the human rights issue and the consummation of the Helsinki agreement concerning human rights, that would be an ever-present consideration in my mind as I deal with the Soviet Union in matters of trade and matters of world peace. But I can't describe to you specifically yet what I shall do. I don't want to mislead anyone into thinking that I have automatic answers or that I am authorized or am inclined at this point to try to act as though I'm already in office.

9. Selecting Key Aides

Q. Governor, you earlier described the process of picking your Cabinet members, and I assume that also applies to some of your own White House aides? It sounds like a very open process. A. It will be.

Q. What happens when you have these people in and we know about it and you've talked with them and you reject them? Isn't that going to cause you some political problems?

A. No. Well, I think maybe some political problems but I believe that if you have become familiar with the procedure used in the selection of my Vice-Presidential running mate, although there may have been some political problems I think they were very rapidly healed. I don't know of any aftermath of ill feeling on the part of the five or six other persons who were publicly considered for Vice President who were not chosen.

And I think the same thing would apply in this instance. If I should consider eight or 10 people for Secretary of Defense and Secretary of State and I can oly choose one for each of those positions, there would be deputy and assistant secretaryships available if they would prefer them, or perhaps if someone is highly qualified they might be willing to serve as Ambassador to Great Britain or to Russia.

I should think the process ought to be as fair as I described it. I thought about this a great deal and I tried to use my own experience in choosing a Vice-Presidential running mate as a basis for this process. There will be about, I would say, 75 persons whom I would choose personally in the Government. I can see clusters of appointments that are closely interrelated—State, Defense, Treasury, Commerce, perhaps even Agriculture in foreign economics, for instance—and obviously if I choose some one who has a particular capability as the secretary of a department, then the under secretary might very well supplement that top person's capabilities.

I think that this process ought to be a very slow and very careful and very methodical one and when I make a decision I will not delay in making the announcement. But I don't anticipate having to hurry through it. There will be at least one or two key positions that I will fill very quickly. As far as the White House staff is concerned, I've only made one final decision, and Jody Powell will be my press secretary in the next Administration.

I wanted to get this announcement done early because I felt that if we delayed it further it might take away from the importance of the appointment of Secretary of State or Secretary of Defense.

And also I might say one other thing: Jody will be authorized to speak for me to the press and particularly in a formal setting. I think that you all know that in an informal interchange at certain times of the day or at night or in the corridors of motels that may not be the case, but I think Jody needs your help and your assistance and your advice. I've been very pleased with Jody's services as press secretary during the campaign, and while I was also Governor before, and have complete confidence in him.

And when he speaks to you at a briefing, then you can take it for granted that he speaks for me when he says he does.

10. U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem

Q. On Page 56 of the Democratic platform there is a statement, "The U.S. Embassy should be moved from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem." How long after you become President would you fulfill this contract and move the embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem?

A. I have never said that I would fulfill that contract. When the Democratic convention was over, on several occasions I used that as one example of a part of the Democratic platform with which I did not agree. And I have said many times—several times, not many—in public that I would reserve that decision until after I become President. But I understand that it is in the Democratic platform, but there are several instances in the platform of commitments that I don't share. I may or may not want to move the embassy to Jerusalem, but I'm not committed to do that at this point.

11. Limitation of Arms

Q. I wonder if what they're [current administration officials] doing [in relation to the SALT talks] this year leaves time to do anything short of get started in this field so that the time should be spent now on getting some negotiating assurance working during the transition, and how much of that whole problem concerns you?

A. I think if my own Administration could accomplish a substantial reduction in dependence upon atomic weapons as an instrument for international relations, it would be a major one. I consider this to be very important. As you probably know, I've made at least three major speeches on the subject of atomic weaponry.

I've stayed as thoroughly familiar with the SALT talks or details as I could within the propriety of being a candidate and now a President-elect. I will have another briefing by the C.I.A.—Senator Mondale and I here—on this Friday.

I met with Dean Rusk about three or four hours on Saturday. He has been an official member of the special committee to assess disarmament. The meeting with Secretary Kissinger that Senator Mondale and I will have will be announced shortly at the time for it. That will be one of the major items that I shall discuss with him.

Obviously, I have no objections to a determined effort being continued by the present Administration for a SALT agreement. And I hope that is ongoing. But to the limit of my ability to understand both the details and the general principles involved, I will become familiar with it.

I would hope that we can be successful. My commitments have been spelled out very thoroughly. I think we ought to freeze at the present level the number of missiles, the number of warheads, overall throw weights and qualitative status and I have said this in two major speeches which I'm sure have been reported to the Soviet leaders.

I think if you have a particular interest in it you might read a speech that Mr. Brezhnev has made and a statement that has been filed with the United Nations by Mr. Gromyko.

They have had sent to me a copy of those two statements. I think they are encouraging. I have no way to know. I've never met with the Russian Ambassador nor any of the Russian leaders. I've deliberately avoided meeting with foreign countries. But I will put that as a top item on my agenda when I become President. I'll try to be qualified on Inauguration Day.

12. Decisions of Kissinger

Q. If I could follow up, I understand that you would have no objections to the present Administration continuing work on a new SALT agreement. A. Yes, and hope that they will.

Q. Secretary Kissinger was, is, the key figure in negotiating this kind of agreement. Are you prepared to accept whatever kinds of negotiation process that Secretary Kissinger wants to continue with? A. Not necessarily.

Q. Not necessarily. What then do you mean, then, when you say that you would like them to keep on? There's a general feeling that Kissinger really can't do very much with the new President being elected from the opposite party.

A. During the campaign I was quite often very critical of the Administration because they were not pursuing the SALT talks aggressively. Following the campaign I think it's fruitless for me to be critical any further. It's of no benefit to the nation to point out the absence of progress in the last two years since the Vladivostok agreement was reached. This has not been confirmed, as you know, it's just a simple unconfirmed agreement based on further negotiations.

I would hope that we can reach, by next fall, when SALT I expires, a comprehensive agreement on nuclear disarmament. If we cannot, then I would be very likely to ask for an extension of the present agreement. But I have hopes that this can be done, but when I mention my hope that the, about the continuation of the negotiations, I think whatever minor progress is made is a step in the right direction. But before a final agreement is reached, of course any negotiating points on which there has been agreement would be subject to renegotiations.

13. Wage and Price Controls

Q. Your campaign statement indicating interest in some form of voluntary wage and price guidelines has created a great deal of consternation among small business. Can we rule out a return to wage and price controls?

A. Well, I would not want to go further than my campaign statement which I intend to honor, and that is to seek from the business community and from the labor community voluntary commitments on a joint basis to try to hold down inflationary pressures, and using existing mechanisms for discussion, I would proceed on that basis. I think if they could be moderately successful along with the so-called jawboning authorities that the President can exercise, that would be the best way to avoid any mandatory price and wage controls and I would certainly like to adhere to my policy of avoiding any mandatory controls.

I can't rule out any opportunity of that kind because I can't predict what sort of disastrous circumstance we might face in the future. I would guess though that under normal circumstances, barring some national calamity, that we could avoid mandatory price and wage controls. And I don't anticipate any calamities.

14. Bombers and Missiles

Q. When you talk about stabilizing the quantity during SALT negotiations, does that mean you would favor operating solely on such weapons as the cruise missile, and also, could you tell us your view of Senator Ribicoff's proposal that Secretary Kissinger continue as a negotiator?

Comparison of Voters and Non-voters

changed.

¶About four of every 10 Americans had voted in each of the last four elections, while about one-fourth had not voted at all. The remainder were occasional voters, dropping in and out of the voter ranks unpredictably. About 8 percent of the electorate had voted in every recent election but did not vote in the past Presidential election. This was offset by 9 percent who had not voted in the past and voted this year.

¶Fifty-two percent of the nonvoters who were old enough to vote four years ago and did not, did not vote again this year.

For a variety of reasons, Americans have never exercised their franchise as faithfully as citizens of other Western democracies. Participation has continued to decline in recent years even though Federal law has done away with literacy tests, lengthy residence requirements and other impediments to voting.

Steady Decline Since 1960

From a high of 60.1 percent in the 1960 Presidential election, voter turnout dropped in each Presidential election to 55.4 percent in 1972 and to 53.3 percent this year. This year's vote, while a new recent low for Presidential elections, was neither as low as some had feared nor as high as some had forecast.

Prof. Walter Dean Burnam, a leading political scientist at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, had been betting all comers that voter turnout would not be one percentage point above or below 49 percent.

There are two schools of thought on nonvoting.

One holds that the trend reflects only the changing nature of the electorate, the growing mobility of Americans and the decline in strong identification with one political party or the other. Eighteen-year-olds were enfranchised for the first time four years ago, and the newly enfranchised, whether the young, the female or the black, have historically lagged in voting.

The other maintains that something deeper and more alarming is at work, that alienation and cynicism have swelled the ranks of nonvoters, adding many who would normally have voted in previous years. A recent study by the Committee for the Study of the American Electorate concluded that this was the case, but the survey interviewed nonvoters only, making comparisons with voters difficult.

While few disagree that disaffection has risen dramatically in recent years as voting has declined, is it valid to say the first causes the second?

Survey Supports First Thought

The Times/CBS News survey cannot answer this question conclusively, but it tends to support the first school of thought.

The survey, which interviewed registered voters who did not vote and those who never registered, found that the nonvoters scarcely differed from the voters on a broad range of questions designed to measure dissatisfaction and distrust.

For example, asked whether government serves the "big interests" or "all the people," nonvoters said big interests by a 59-37 margin. Voters agreeed, 58-37.

Moreover, asked "how much of the time do you think you can trust the government to do what's right," nonvoters replied the following way: always, 7 percent; most of the time, 36; some of the time, 51; never, 3. The same figures for voters were 6-37-52-3.

However, the survey suggests strongly that there is an important distinction between distrust of the system and a feeling among some citizens that they are not part of it. This distinction between active alienation and a more passive sense of powerlessness, confirms previous political science findings.

Nonvoters Find Little Difference

Thus, nonvoters were much more likely to say that one person's vote makes no difference, that there is no difference between the major parties, or that it makes no difference who is President. These feelings are especially prevalent among those in the lower socio-economic classes, who have traditionally not voted as regularly as the well educated and well paid.

The voters and nonvoters gave sharply differing answers to the question: "If people don't like any of the candidates running for an office, should they vote for the one who is the 'less evil' or not vote at all?" Voters, by 75-21, opted for the "lesser evil" while nonvoters said they preferred not to vote, 50-45. This feeling was especially prominent among those under 30.

The growing entry of young people into the voting pool helps explain at least a part of the nonvoting trend. The postwar baby boom, along with the enfranchisement of 18-year-olds, has expanded the under-30 portion of the electorate from 18 percent in 1960 to 31 percent today.

While the sample was not large enough to be conclusive about it, the Times/CBS News survey suggested that nearly two-thirds of those under 21 did not vote this year, nor did over half of those between 21 and 29.

The survey also suggested that the simplification of registration procedures would improve turnout somewhat. Over two-thirds of those who were not registered said they would have voted had they been registered.

Failure to Register

Asked directly why they had failed to register, most said that they just never got around to it or that it was too hard for them. Scarcely any volunteered distrust in politicians as a reason.

When those who were registered but did not vote were asked why, the largest number said they were physically unable to for a variety of reasons. Again, very few cited distrust of officials, although a substantial number, 18 percent, said the reason was that they did not like either candidate.

Some students of political behavior say that the greater mystery is not why people do not vote but why they do, given the fact that it is usually hard to see the impact of one vote, that voting takes time and effort and is likely to get one called for jury duty.

Fifty-three percent of the voters interviewed cited "civic duty" as the reason they went to the polls. Only one in every 10 said he voted because he thought his vote would make a difference, and only one in seven voted because he felt strongly about his candidate. And just 17 percent said they voted because they considered this a "very important election."

As is traditional, the nonvoters tended less often to have opinions on the major political issues. But when they did they were mostly on the more liberal, or Democratic, side of them, except possibly on racial matters. They were less likely to read newspapers or watch television news.

Another possible clue to nonvoting emerged from a question to which respondents were asked to agree or disagree: "The country needs more radical change than is possible through the ballot box." Voters disagreed by 52 to 41 percent, while nonvoters agreed 58 to 33.

2,042 Were Queried In Times/CBS Survey

The New York Times and CBS News survey was based on telephone interviews with 2,042 men and women of voting age across the continental United States from Nov. 4 to Nov. 8.

Each respondent was interviewed in the previous New York Times/CBS News survey, conducted from Oct. 24 to Oct. 27.

The results were weighted by selection probabilities related to household size, and by race, sex, region, age and education. The weighting procedure was used as a safeguard against random variations for these factors in the sample.

In addition, the results were weighted by factors related to voter turnout, since respondents in a survey of this type are often reluctant to acknowledge that they failed to vote.

In theory, one can say with 95 percent certainty that the overall results in a sample of this size differs by no more than 2.5 percentage points in either direction from what would have been obtained by interviewing all Americans of voting age.

The margin of error is somewhat larger for smaller subgroups.

These theoretical errors do not take into account a small additional margin of error inherent in any survey of public opinion.

Assisting The Times in its survey coverage was Prof. Gary Orren of Harvard University.

SLOWDOWN OF AIR TRAFFIC AVERTED BY PAY DECISION

A nationwide air-traffic slowdown was averted yesterday when the Civil Service Commission supplied the flight controllers' union with acceptable assurances on the effect of a new pay-scale decision.

The commission's decision, announced Friday, gave approval in principle to higher job classifications and pay scales for a significant number of the nation's 14,000 controllers.

But the head of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers' Organization, John F. Leyden, objected that some of the language was too vague and demanded clarification by noon yesterday. Otherwise, he implied, there could be another "by the book" slowdown such as the one hat snarled flight operations for several days in July.

Yesterday, the commission assured the union that full-fledged controllers at a minimum of eight stations would be upgraded from GS-13 job status, the highest controllers can now attain, to GS-14.

The commission also said that no fewer than 22 other facilities would benefit from upgradings to levels below GS-14.

In regard to the small number of proposed downgradings, the controllers said they had received guarantees from the Federal Aviation Administration that any affected members could retain their current salaries by bidding for transfer to other stations.

Petition Drive Is Planned to Urge Carter to Issue Vietnam Amnesty

CHICAGO, Nov. 15 (UPI)—Representatives of a dozen religious groups today announced the start of a national drive to obtain one million signatures on petitions urging Jimmy Carter to issue a blanket amnesty for all Vietnam-era draft resisters and military deserters.

"This is an effort to show him [Carter] there is a broad base of support for amnesty in the United States," said Ron Freund, Midwest director of the Clergy and Laity Concerned. Mr. Freund said that more than a dozen religious groups with headquarters in Chicago would begin the nationwide petition drive.

He called the President-elect's plan for a blanket pardon rather than a blanket amnesty "totally inadequate," asserting, "It would not include 790,000 Vietnam-era veterans with less than honorable discharges, 500,000 men who failed to register for the draft, 8,000 at-large deserters and thousands of nonviolent civilian resisters."

Straw Poll a Good Predictor

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 15 (AP)—A literal straw poll has proved a good predictor of Presidential politics. The General Cinema Corporation's poll, in which patrons at its 645 theaters are asked to vote with soft-drink straws, favored the Carter-Mondale ticket over Ford-Dole 52.3 percent to 47.7 percent. The margin of victory for Mr. Carter in the election was 51 to 48.

rt in Unemployment

g the campaign you sug- you would like to see un- down to about 4 percent.

Do you think you can get the rate down to that during the bulk of your first term?

A. I would guess that would be a likely prospect. It might be the parameters within which we have been working and planning or have been spelled out many times during the campaign that by the end of the first four years, we would hope to have a balanced budget.

We would anticipate a 5 to 6 percent annual growth rate in our economy, which is compatible with what it was under Johnson and Kennedy before the Vietnam war started. Our goal would be to get unemployment down to the 4-4½ percent level which would be equivalent to, I think, 3 percent for all those above 20 years old.

Within that framework, the inflation rate could be reduced to the 4 to 5 percent level.

My own economists believe that you don't reach the inevitable inflationary pressures until you get the unemployment rate down to 5½ percent or less. At that point, you start making tradeoffs between unemployment reduction and inflation. I'm not an economist but the reason for that is if you start using industrial capacity that might be marginal and efficiency, you start employing people whose efficiency is not as high as those who are in the normal work force.

But because we have such a great unused industrial capacity—now almost 30 percent—and such a greatly unused manpower capacity — about eight million Americans—that gives a great reservoir of improvement before the inflationary pressures inevitably build up.

The point that I'd like to make is this: By targeting unemployment programs among constituent groups or in geographical areas where the unemployment rate is very high, not having a uniform effort nationwide, you can delay the impact of inflation on an average basis by concentrating in those high unemployment areas.

And some economists have estimated that you could reduce the unemployment rate at least a half percent or perhaps even more by targeting unemployment programs before the inflationary pressures build up. I believe that answers several questions.

Q. Is this what you had in mind during the campaign, or have things changed? A. No, I think this is exactly compatible with what I said during the campaign.

20. Meeting With Ford

Q. Will you meet with President Ford soon, Governor? A. My plans are to meet with President Ford when he invites me. I understand that the likely time is the latter part of this month, which would be about the last week in the month. And I hope to meet with Secretary Kissinger before then, and I'll meet with the C.I.A. on Friday. I'll go to Washington next week for at least two days—the days are yet to be determined.

Q. Is that when you'll meet with Kissinger, next week? A. Those schedule arrangements have not yet been made, but that's my plan.

Carter Voices Hope Oil Nations Will Show Restraint on Price Rise

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—President-elect Jimmy Carter urged the oil-exporting nations today to show restraint and not increase the price of oil at their meeting next month.

In a news conference in Plains, Ga., Mr. Carter also said that once he took office on Jan. 20, he would feel free to renegotiate any agreements already made by the Ford Administration in the strategic arms talks with the Soviet Union.

The possibility of an oil-price increase of as much as 10 to 20 percent by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries has been worrying the Ford Administration. Mr. Carter, in a news conference on Nov. 4, added his voice to those opposed to a price rise.

Ford Administration officials had hoped that Mr. Carter would take an active role in trying to head off a price rise since his words would have more impact than those of an outgoing administration. But Mr. Carter's advisers had urged him to avoid the issue on the ground that lack of results might weaken his prestige before he assumed office.

Increase Is Believed Likely

In fact, most oil experts believe that the oil-exporting nations are almost certain to approve an increase of 10 percent or more at the Dec. 15 meeting in Qatar on the Persian Gulf. With this in mind, Mr. Carter was careful to avoid making any threats. He said:

"My own hope is that the OPEC nations will not increase the price of oil. That's expressed as an individual who has no responsibility in the government. I think that it would be better for the developing nations of the world, for the entire world economy, for our own country and, I think ultimately, for the OPEC nations, if they would exercise great restraint in increasing the price of oil.

"I would hope that they would not increase the price at all, but other than my public statement I've just made, I would have no role to play in that deliberation."

Mr. Carter's views on foreign policy are a matter of general interest. Today, he spoke at some length on arms control and nuclear matters in answers to questions, but not in specific terms.

Sees Possibility of Renegotiation

On the arms talks, now deadlocked over whether a Soviet bomber and a United States cruise missile should be included in the ceiling of 2,400 missiles and bombers, Mr. Carter encouraged the Ford Administration to continue the negotiations. It is widely believed that no progress is possible until the Carter team takes office.

He said that "before a final agreement is reached, any negotiating points on which there has been agreement would be subject to renegotiation." This seemed to suggest that he might order a complete review of the talks and raise questions about those areas already agreed upon.

Mr. Carter also said that he hoped to achieve a "comprehensive agreement on nuclear disarmament" by next fall when the current five-year freeze on offensive strategic weapons expires. In any event, Mr. Carter said, he would probably ask for an extension of the current freeze, which puts limits on the number of land-based intercontinental missiles and submarine-launched missiles.

Mr. Carter referred to his election campaign speeches in which he urged a freeze on current arms levels and reductions to follow as well as a moratorium for five years on all underground nuclear explosions.

In the news conference Mr. Carter also indicated interest in a speech last month by Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Soviet leader, mentioning disarmament. Mr. Carter also referred to a document submitted in September to the United Nations by Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko repeating Soviet calls for progress toward disarmament and proposing a comprehensive test ban.

OPEC ECONOMISTS MEET IN VIENNA ON PRICE RISE

Special to The New York Times

VIENNA, Nov. 15—Economic experts of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries met here today for secret discussions on proposals to put up the price of crude oil by 10 to 25 percent.

OPEC officials said that member governments of the 13-nation group were advocating an oil price increase as an "adjustment to world economic developments." A decision on a new oil price structure is to be made by the ministers conference, OPEC's supreme authority, in a meeting in Qatar Dec. 15. If—as is generally expected here—the organization agrees on higher prices, these would in all likelihood go into effect Jan. 1.

The body state started a session at OPEC's headquarters today was the organization's economic committee. Meetings behind closed doors are expected to go on all week. No information on the debates will be issued.

The Austrian police took special measures today to protect the oil group's headquarters on two floors in a modern office building opposite Vienna's university centered on the Ring.

Navy Is Seeking Funds to Revive Condor Missile

By JOHN W. FINNEY
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—The Navy is seeking to revive its Condor missile program that was canceled earlier this year by Congress after the weapon became entangled in technical difficulties and suggestions of conflict of interest on the part of Pentagon officials.

Military sources reported that Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld had approved a Navy request that funds be included in next year's defens budget to resume work on the costly air-to-surface missile, which has been described by the Pentagon as "a silver bullet." Each of the television-guided missiles, designed to be launched by a plane from outside the enemy's missile defenses, will cost about $400,000.

At the insistence of the House Appropriations Committee, Congress cut off funds for the program in this year's defense budget. The committee questioned the missile's operational utility, effectiveness, vulnerability to enemy countermeasures, and cost.

Disturbed by Relationships

In addition, committee members were disturbed by suggestions of cooperative relationships between defense officials and Rockwell International, which looks upon the Condor missile as its entry back into the missile business.

The Democratic majority of the Joint Congressional Committee on Defense Production recently found substantial evidence that Dr. Malcolm R. Currie, director of defense research and engineering, cooperated unduly with Rockwell in supporting the Condor program against Pentagon and Congressional critics.

The House Appropriations Committee mentioned in its report how it had "terminated" the Condor program. If so, it would have been one of those rare occasions when Congress had stopped a major weapons program. But like other arms projects that have run into difficulties in Congress, Condor is proving to have phoenix-like qualities.

Fund Item Detected

The Naval Air System Command, according to Pentagon sources, first sought to tuck Condor funds away in the Navy budget, only to be detected by the comptroller's office in the Defense Department. Navy Secretary J. William Middendorf 3d then wrote an appeal to Mr. Rumsfeld to restore fundig for the Condor program.

A spokesman explained that the Navy still regarded the Condor as an "essential" weapon for attacking "high value, highly defended targets."

Korean Lobbyist's Absence May Affect U.S. Inq

By NICHOLAS M. HORROCK
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—If the Korean businessman Tongsun Park does not return to the United States, that will further complicate an investigation already burdened by questions of diplomatic immunity, access to offshore bank accounts and the legal value of foreign intelligence data, sources familiar with the investigation said today.

But a series of interviews with sources inside and outside the Government shows that the investigation of Korean influence peddling was, as one key source put it, "alive and well" and moving to uncover those in the United States Government who might have accepted bribes and those outside who might have offered them.

The Department of Justice, which is conducting the investigation through a section charged with protecting "public integrity," has made no official comment on the scope, nature or targets of the inquiry despite weeks of news coverage.

'A Life of Its Own'

And this, several sources said, was part of the problem. "The investigation has taken on a life of its own in the press," one key source said. "It has ups, downs, triumphs and failures, many of which may be artificial and based upon fragmentary information."

But one key source said that there were no "recent developments, that is, in the past several weeks," that have changed the momentum or expectations of the inquiry.

In general terms, the investigation is of allegations that the South Korean Government bribed United States officials—representatives, senators and possibly members of the executive branch—to get actions favorable to Korean interests or to stave off things that might be unfavorable.

By the very nature of the responsibility of the public integrity section, this investigation places priority on prosecution of members of this Government who may have accepted bribes above prosecution of Korean nationals or American private citizens who may have referred them.

Cases Are Hard to Prove

Bribery and corruption conspiracy cases are extremely difficult to prove. If the bribe is made covertly and in cash, then usually only the giver and the receiver can testify to what has happened. Also the action of the Government official in exchange for the bribe may have been too subtle to detect or something that he would have done anyway in his normal course of work.

But the Korean case has been further burdened by some very unusual problems.

Park Tong Sun, the Korean known here as Tongsun Park and allegedly the central figure of the influence-peddling ring, is not an American national and keeps much of his assets abroad. He met with prosecutors several times "voluntarily" and then left the country. There are reports from well-placed sources that he will never return.

If, in fact, Mr. Park was the conduit of bribes to American officials, a normal prosecutorial strategy would be to grant him immunity in exchange for his naming and testifying against the officials.

Even though Mr. Park is abroad, he could face prosecution and some discomfort. For instance, if the Government has the evidence, it could obtain an indictment against him and seek to extradite him.

An associate of Mr. Park said recently that this would bar Mr. Park from the comfortable and sophisticated spots of the world, such as London, Paris, Geneva and Rome, and banish him to countries with which the United States has poor treaties, such as Paraguay.

Advised to End Cooperation

Late last week, Robert J. Ables, a lawyer for Pacific Development Inc., which is Mr. Park's company in the United States, wrote to Edward H. Levi, the Attorney General, and said that he was advising the company's employees to end their voluntary cooperation with the prosecutors because of alleged leaks to the news media.

Other American witnesses have not been quick to volunteer their cooperation. Two sources suggested that if the Government issued a subpoena, the defense could move to quash it and thus force the Government to disclose that it was relying in part on "tainted" evidence, that is, electronic surveillances of the "Blue House," or the Korean Presidential palace, that was conducted to collect foreign intelligence.

The Justice Department has not confirmed that it is relying on such evidence or admitted that such evidence would be tainted as having come from an unauthor-

Open to Question

Whether bank records would be valuable in this investigation is question. The Government has one allegation that cash was sen South Korean diplomatic pouch tributed without passing through

There is also another financia problem. Mr. Park has told Fed tigators that he brought money United States from accounts in th mas, a nation that, like Switzerla tects the identity of depositors records.

Investigators are also known looking into whether any Americ cials involved may have an "off account to which the money was ferred.

Syria's Role In Lebanon

[illegible] Syrian Arab Republic is char-[illegible]ed by its people's traditional [illegible]ement in national affairs, by [illegible]olitical leadership, and by its [illegible]egic location on the map of [illegible]turbulant Middle East. Indeed, [illegible]ften said in this area that Syria [illegible] heart of the Arab World. [illegible] of these features have been [illegible] significant in the Lebanese cri-[illegible] and the entire Middle East [illegible]lem.

[illegible]en the Syrians take action [illegible] when they deal with their [illegible] brethren and with the world, [illegible] do so without any false illu-[illegible]. The Syrians have gone to the [illegible] of the Lebanese crisis with all [illegible] practicality required by the sit-[illegible]n. President Hafez Al-Assad [illegible] meeting of the Local Coun-[illegible] representatives last July that [illegible] who plotted the events in [illegible]on also plotted to get the [illegible] mixed up, the roles inter-[illegible], and borderlines blurred." [illegible]ent Assad emphasized that [illegible] role is decisive and essen-[illegible] because it is the national role [illegible] stems from all the cultural [illegible]ciples of the Arab nation."

[illegible]is principle of fraternal rela-[illegible]ship is the basis of all dealings [illegible]ong the Arab countries, includ-[illegible] Lebanon, which has even [illegible] ties with Syria. For until [illegible] War I Lebanon was never [illegible]endent of its neighbor.

[illegible] fact Lebanon was always an [illegible]sion to what is known as [illegible]ural Syria" or "Bilad Al-Sham." [illegible] 1520, according to the well-[illegible] historian Philip Hitti, "Syria [illegible] Province which consisted of [illegible]tricts, the most important of [illegible] are Jerusalem, Nablus, [illegible], Palmyra, Sidon, and Beirut. [illegible] (the second largest city in [illegible]non) consisted of a number of [illegible]icts, among which were [illegible]s, Hama and Salamieh (Syria's [illegible]ands)."

[illegible]r a long time these Districts [illegible]h form a part of present [illegible]non remained part of Syria. [illegible] the forms of autonomous and [illegible] government that were grant-[illegible]ery now and then were limit-[illegible] Mount Lebanon, as was the [illegible] during the Ma'an and Shihabi [illegible]nistrations around 1700.

[illegible]wever, as a result of the Sikes-[illegible] treaty of 1915, which divid-[illegible]he Eastern Mediterranean [illegible] among the Allies (especially [illegible] and France), Lebanon ac-[illegible]d a special entity. The rest of Sy-[illegible] as to constitute another fully [illegible]endent country.

[illegible] American historian George [illegible]ios once said: "Since Leba-[illegible]was France's sphere of in-[illegible]e in the Near East, the first [illegible]aken by the French was the [illegible]sion of Lebanon at Syria's [illegible]se. Thus in 1920, General [illegible] (who had led the French [illegible] through Lebanon and Syria) [illegible] a decree creating the state [illegible]ater Lebanon. The new state [illegible]ed the original District of [illegible]on plus all the Districts fall-[illegible]ectly on its northern, west-[illegible] stern and southern borders. [illegible] cree thus added to Lebanon [illegible]stal cities of Tripoli, Beirut, [illegible] and Tire, in addition to the [illegible] Ba'albak with the furtile [illegible]alley. The population and [illegible] the new state were doub-[illegible]d the two port cities of [illegible]nd Tripoli (which had been [illegible]ain maritime trade routes) [illegible]ded to it."

[illegible] in 1943 it was decided to [illegible] foreign troops and estab-[illegible] new Lebanese indepen-[illegible], the new state did not [illegible] much of the territory that [illegible]art of Lebanon.

[illegible] today, Syria and Leba-[illegible]own to the Arabs as the [illegible]— do not exchange di-[illegible]representation, and na-[illegible] both countries travel [illegible] borders without passports [illegible] Members of one and the [illegible]ily live and work in both [illegible] without any work per-[illegible]sidence cards. Family in-[illegible]es and close ties can best [illegible] in the fact that Syria's [illegible]taff of the Armed Forces back in the fifties was a Lebanese citizen, and until now nationals of each country occupy important positions in the other. And since various families in both countries come from one origin, it is significant that one finds members of one family belonging to different religions (Islam and Christianity) as we see in the Shihabi's, Yezbek's, Shatila's, etc. It is also very common to find two brothers with different citizenships, one Lebanese and the other Syrian.

It is mainly for this reason that Syria came to the aid of Christians during the 1860 religious strife, subsequently giving refuge to many of them, especially American and Anglican missionaries. This is still remembered by many people, as is the fact that Kamal Jumblat's grandfather was behind the entire mutiny.

Today again the pattern of events comes full cycle, and the grandson (hiding behind progressive and socialist posters) attempts to give the civil war a religious color, thus aiding in the plot to partition his own country.

Furthermore, it is only too clear that the security of each of the two countries is closely related to that of the other. Yet Syria, because of these special circumstances, put up with the backward and chaotic situation in Lebanon without interfering in its internal affairs in spite of the danger that that situation posed. In fact Syria was always supplying Lebanon with its basic needs of foodstuffs and labor, and giving it commercial support, because the Lebanese economy was never self-supporting and did not have the minimum requirements of self-sufficiency.

At the beginning of the present crisis the Lebanese called for the modernization of their backward system, and Syria hoped that they could develop their socially, politically, and economically corrupt system (that was more like a seventeenth-century administration) to a twentieth-century system. Syria was prepared to offer anything to help achieve this goal, but the feuding parties kept contradicting and changing their positions.

But the increased fighting and violence and the formation of a military government in the middle of 1975 brought about Syrian efforts for reconciliation. Syria therefore sent a delegation to Lebanon which was able to bring about a cease-fire and help form a new government replacing the military regime in July 1975. This was followed by the appointment of a "National Dialogue" Committee whose duty was to set new foundations for the political, economic and social life based on the national unity of the Lebanese people.

External as well as internal factors, however, exercised tremendous pressure and planted paid mercenaries among the ranks of the fighting parties to paralyze the efforts of the National Dialogue Committee. This, and the failure of some Lebanese quarters to recognize the nature of the conspiracy, reignited the fuse of fighting and sniping, thus increasing the calls for resumed Syrian efforts which became the only hope for an end to the tragedy.

At the peak of a violent flare-up during the beginning of this year, and as a result of concentrated negotiations with all parties, a Syrian delegation went to Lebanon to work towards the following goals: bringing the fighting to an end, supervising the process of a peaceful settlement, undertaking efforts for national conciliation, forming a new national unity government, and enforcing the Lebanese-Palestinian agreements.

In consultation with the former Lebanese President, Suleiman Franjieh, an agreement was reached to end the fighting as of January 22, 1976. A higher military committee consisting of Syrians, Lebanese and Palestinians was formed to supervise the cease-fire and the return to normalcy. On February 7th, President Franjieh visited Damascus where a final agreement was reached for a political settlement which had been accepted by all parties. President Franjieh subsequently announced the agreement, as "The Constitutional Paper", on Radio Lebanon. Thus a common denominator was found for the formation of a cabinet.

But those who were interested in continuing the fighting broke their promises and began the so-called army camps war to break the unity of the Lebanese army, the only national establishment which had not heretofore been disunited. This was followed by the Ahdab military coup which initiated a new factor in the crisis by demanding the resignation of the President. This demand was used by some of the parties to the conflict in order to escalate the fighting, forcing Syria to conduct renewed contacts with all sides based on the following premises:

1. Rejection of religious conflict and the murder of citizens for their religious beliefs. This is completely alien to the traditions and ethical principles of the Arab nation. It is also in conflict with all religious, humane principles, and the spirit of love and toleration preached by Islam and Christianity.
2. One drop of Lebanese blood is worth more than any political position and personal gain.
3. Maintaining national unity is above all religious conflict and political gain.

President Franjieh consented to resign after the amendment of the constitution and the election of a new president, and steps were taken towards this aim. However, once again a certain party to the conflict escalated the fighting and complicated the political situation, thus ending the two-month-old cease-fire. Certain districts and villages were besieged because of their religious beliefs, and innocent people were murdered.

The matter exceeded all apparent pretexts put forward by the various factions, and reached deep into the more important and real reasons for the conspiracy. These are the partition of Lebanon, covering up for the Sinai Agreeemt (between Egypt and Israel), and pushing the Palestinians into the center of the conflict. The conspiracy also aimed primarily at the involvement of the Syrian Arab Republic in a secondary battle which would divert it from the battle of liberating its lands.

Syria welcomed every effort to end the tragic events, for the primary concern of all Syrians is the alleviation of the tragedy and bloodshed. For Syria, every Lebanese citizen, Moslem or Christian, is sacred because he is a member of the Arab nation and the human community. Syria will fulfill its obligation towards Lebanon at any time, and will do everything in its power to bring the fighting to an end, including offering military support if it is requested by the Lebanese.

President Assad said on this point: "What is taking place in Lebanon is an Arab internal affair, and the Arabs alone have the right and responsibility to handle the situation. The only factor which has in the past and will in the future decide the extent of Syria's involvement as well as the number and positions of Syrian troops is the interest of the Lebanese people because we share the same history, future and destiny."

In addition to these factors, the Lebanese crisis created for Syria a new problem: As a result of the fighting about one million persons moved to Syria, that is close to one immigrant for every twenty Syrians. We should recall here that the immigration to India of one Bengali for every sixty Indians resulted in the 1971 Indian-Pakistani War. It is only natural that Syria should try to stop the bloodshed and arrest the progress of the conspiracy.

Syria has taken this stand based on principles and convictions; it was the other parties who have shifted positions. Syria has adhered to its principles and has based its relationships with the other parties according to their attitudes to these principles. Syria's conduct is governed by the Arab traditional ethics and the Lebanese-Palestinian interests.

From the outset, Syria defined four aims for its political brotherly initiative in Lebanon. They are:

1. Bringing the fighting to an end because this foils the conspiracy against Lebanon, the Palestinians and the Arab nation.
2. Preventing the partitioning of Lebanon regardless of the efforts and sacrifices this takes.
3. Protecting the Palestinian Resistance Movement from the danger it is exposed to in Lebanon and sparing it the involvement in Lebanese affairs.
4. Aiding the Lebanese brethren develop thier system politically, economically and socially through a process of democratic dialogue and away from human massacres.

For these reasons the Lebanese people looked to Syria for help against bloodshed and displacement. And Syria came to the rescue, especially when asked by the legitimate Lebanese authorities, including the President, Premier, Speaker of the Parliament, and members of Parliament, all of whom were aware of the dangers of partition. (The Syrian military presence in Lebanon is at the disposal of these legitimate authorities and their desire to secure Lebanon's integrity and stability. This has been emphasized by President Ilias Sarkis who visited Damascus a number of times and conducted their constructive discussions.)

Observers and newsmen from all over the world have witnessed the calm and security which prevailed where Syrian forces have gone in, and the relief expressed by the Lebanese residents of these areas.

What is more tragic about the Lebanese dilemma is that the Palestinians have been dragged into it, and have been involved in Lebanon's internal affairs. This in itself constitutes a plot against their cause. As a result, agreements were reached with Yasser 'Arafat to achieve a cease-fire more than once; the last and most significant cease-fire was that of the 16th of April, but this time also the agreement was broken, and foreign pressures and mercenaries kept the war going, forcing Syria to take steps to protect the lives of all brothers.

Just as in the case of Lebanon, the struggle for the sake of Palestine has been part of Syria's destiny and of its national security. For this struggle Syria has made many sacrifices in manpower and appropriations, both of which are badly needed in this stage of Syria's economic development. Following the 1970 Corrective Movement led by President Hafez Al-Assad, Syria made great efforts to reach a peaceful settlement in the area. Syria's efforts and flexible attitude were acknowledged by the U.S. Secretary of State Dr. Henry Kissinger. Syria's aims in these efforts were a just and lasting peace, the liberation of the occupied Golan Heights, and a guarantee for the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people. It was for these legitimate reasons that Syria and Egypt went to war in October 1973.

After the October War, American offers were made to achieve limited Israeli withdrawal from the Golan not taking into consideration the rights of the Palestinians. This Syria refused, connecting its rights with those of the Palestinian people, and concentrating its efforts in this direction.

But the Lebanese crisis came to involve the Syrians, Lebanese and Palestinians in a side issue, diminishing the chances of a peaceful settlement which had become quite attainable.

With all of these circumstances in mind, is it not clear what Syria wants in Lebanon, and why it has tried relentlessly to bring about an end to the fighting?

The answer of course has been given added emphasis in the Summit Conferences of Riyadh and Cairo. The decisions made by the Riyadh limited Summit on October 18 did not differ in form and content from the principles and aims advocated by Syria. For these reasons Syria took active part in the Conference, as it had worked all along to achieve the aims approved by the participants in the Conference.

Syria's position has remained unchanged throughout the crisis, thus increasing the efforts and sacrifices made by the Syrian people in their noble struggle to protect their Lebanese and Palestinian brothers from these tragic events.

Today, hope is renewed, with the blessings of the Cairo Summit of October 25, that an end to this tragedy is close at hand. A new stage has begun during which common Arab efforts will be renewed in the confrontation with the Zionist enemies and for the return of occupied Arab territories.

The Corrective Movement in the Syrian Arab Republic on its sixth anniversary looks forward with optimism to further contributions to erasing the ill effects of the Lebanese tragedy as well as to a better and brighter future.

Syria In a Period of Economic Growth

A visitor to the Syrian Arabic Republic today might well think he is touring a huge workshop: throughout the country one sees factories under construction, roads being built, and recently finished bridges and buildings. The vitality and energy in the country's economy can best be seen in its main harbor cities of Lattakia and Tartous where scores of ships have to wait for days for their turn to unload their cargoes. New modern highways have been constructed linking all the cities and towns of Syria.

The Syrian economy during Hafez Assad's Presidency since 1970 has been characterized by two main features:

1) The open-door policy both internally and with foreign countries.
2) The establishment of major projects.

The Open-Door Policy:

The importance of the open-door economic policy at this stage stems from its coming after a period of isolation during which the country was deprived of foreign investments, and local capital was forced to seek foreign markets. The country's economy was in need for a shot in the arm. Therefore the most important steps taken were, first, the law governing foreign investments, and, secondly, the endorsement of all international agreements which protect and guarantee capitals and investments.

The Law of Foreign Investments offers many exemptions, facilities and advantages which help increase the financial profit of investments, in addition to strengthening the country's ties with world economy. New Free Zone areas have been established to make better use of Syria's strategic and trade location. This step has enhanced the importation and storage of foreign products and encouraged the exportation of local goods and international commercial exchange.

These steps played a considerable role in gaining the confidence of Arab and foreign investors, thus giving the country the benefit of foreign investments in a variety of economic sectors.

The Establishment of Major Projects:

Because the Syrian Arab Republic lacks a large oil production—in contrast to most Arab countries—it has had to finance its economic growth and balance its trade from three main revenues:

1) A well-established industry which supplies the needs of the local markets with a surplus for exportation.

2) A developed agriculture capable of exporting its produce to foreign markets.

3) A tourist industry which brings foreign currency into the country. The authorities have attempted to develop these three sectors of the country's economy. Towards this aim President Assad's Administration has given priority to the establishment of major projects, contracts for which have been signed with foreign countries. These projects have had a very beneficial effect on the national economy and have become centers of development contributing to other sectors of the economy and to many peripheral industries employing hundreds of Syrian workers.

The aim of these projects is the exploitation of Syria's natural resources such as petroleum, phosphates, and salt, and the development of the country's agricultural and geographic location since Syria occupies a strategic center in the transportation network of the entire region.

The Administration's agricultural policy aims mainly at giving the country self sufficiency in food products such as grains, rice, vegetables, fruits, and cotton. This policy also works for a surplus in these products to be exported to neighboring countries which suffer from the lack of food stuffs.

The following is a list of the most important major projects which have been set up in Syria and which required great effort in terms of capital, manpower, and technical skills:

1) The Euphrates Dam: This project will ultimately irrigate 640,000 hectares of arable land, and will generate 1.1 million kilowatts per hour, while the Dam has already helped in the reclamation of 20,000 hectares in the Rega area. Many contracts for land reclamation, seed selections and animal farming have been signed with foreign countries and firms.

2) The Nitrogen Fertilizer Factory: The project aims at supplying the country with all its needs of fertilizers. The product of this factory in 1975 reached 86,000 tons.

3) The national exploitation of petroleum: Syria's petroleum production for this year reached 10.1 million tons. This has also led to the establishment of a number of petrochemical industries.

4) Phosphate mining near Palmyra: The total product of this project for 1975 reached 857,000 tons.

5) Extensions have been added to the Lattakia Harbor; and the Port of Tartous has been established, equipped with the most modern facilities.

6) In the transportation sector Lattakia has been linked with Deir El-Zor by a modern railway which is also to be extended to Kamishly. Another railway has been constructed between Tartous and Homs, and a modern highway network has been built between the country's cities and towns.

As a result of these and other similar projects the Gross National Product has reached record levels as seen in the following table:

The Principal Factors of the Gross National Product in Millions Syrian Pounds

	1963	1970	1975	Growth Rate 1970-75
Agriculture	1,164.3	1,345.3	3,529.8	363.4%
Industry and Mining	579.3	1,171.8	4,468.0	381.3%
Construction	115.0	217.8	1,165.4	535.1%
Transportation	295.0	580.3	1,278.0	220.2%
Trade	745.0	1,148.5	4,760.5	414.5%
Other	911.7	1,694.1	4,483.6	—
Total	3,810.3	6,157.8	19,685.3	319.7%

The great economic progress witnessed in the Syrian Arab Republic has led to an increase in the average income of Syrian citizens that can be seen in the following table:

The Development of the Average Personal Income in Syrian Pounds

763	986	2,676	271.4%

This increase in turn raised the general consumption rates proportionately:

General Consumption Rate of Increase in Millions Syrian Pounds

5,710	14,725	250%

As a result of these positive developments in the economic growth of the country, the export-import movement has been greatly enhanced:

Export-Import Developments in Millions Syrian Pounds

	1970	1975	Growth Rate
Imported Goods	1,366	5,929	[illegible]
Exported Goods	740	2,545	[illegible]

It is also to be noticed here that the general and development budgets during this period have undergone similar great increases.

The Increase in General and Development Budgets in Millions Syrian Pounds

General Budget	943	1,384	5,896
Development Budget	622	1,396	10,668
Total	1,565	2,780	16,564

These healthy developments in Syria's economy were reflected in the Third Five-Year Plan which achieved its goals (sometimes going beyond them) in spite of the effects of the 1973 October War and the national defense efforts it required.

The Fourth Five-Year Plan (1976-1980)

The Fourth Five-Year Plan (1976-1980) inaugurated at the beginning of the present year is an expression of even greater ambition.

The Plan aims at an annual growth rate of 12 per cent, which will allow the national income to be doubled in seven years. This growth rate is one of the highest in the world. Furthermore, the total amount of investments in this Plan comes up to 50 billion Syrian Pounds, compared to 20 billion in the Third Five-Year Plan.

There are two focal points for the investments in the Fourth Five-Year Plan. First, the establishment of basic industries. These will include petrochemicals, two oil refineries in Tartous and Banias with a total capacity of 8.5 million tons, and a number of cement factories to meet the growing need for this basic material. And, secondly, the establishment of various transformational (conversion) industries to meet the needs of the local market. These include:

- Food Products: The Plan includes the establishment of three canned food factories, four sugar refineries, and a number of dairy factories.
- Textiles: The Plan will set up 430 thousand new looms, three clothes factories, and two rug factories.
- Engineering Industries: To be established are two cable factories, one scrap-iron smelting plant, a number of glass factories, and one iron rod factory.
- Chemical Industries: To include one nitrogen fertilizer factory, one phosphate fertilizer factory, a paper factory and a tire factory.

The plan also realizes appropriations for the completion of a road network of over 1,250 kilometers in addition to a number of vital railway lines. It also emphasizes the continuation of mining and excavation projects to locate and exploit minerals throughout the country. These projects aim at exploiting the country's mineral resources estimated to be close to 100 million tons of iron deposits, one billion tons of phosphates, and 900 thousand tons of salt.

In the agricultural sector the Syrian Fourth Five-Year Plan aims at the reclamation of 240 thousand hectares in the Euphrates Dam area, the construction of 58 small dams, and a number of grain silos. It also has appropriations for the setting up of 27 cattle farms, 13 poultry farms, six fisheries, and five animal feeds plants.

The open-door policy endorsed by the present Administration has called for more attention to be directed to the tourist industry. The Syrian Arab Republic is world-famous for its ancient relics and sites that can be seen everywhere. These ancient archeological sites are indications of many civilizations which flourished in this land, and attract the attention of many people from all parts of the world. The Plan has appropriations for tourism amounting to 1,500 million Syrian Pounds to be spent on the development of archeological sites, the construction of hotels (Meridian and Sheraton chains especially), restaurants and summer resorts.

537,874	870,276	1,171,722

These huge investments have not, however, been limited to the development of material comfort only. Much has been done to further the human concerns and pursuits. One example of this aspect of Syria's development is the increase in the budgetary increase for education. The following is a table that shows the rate of increase in the budget of education in million Syrian Pounds.

140,800	257,447	714,351	1,312,296

Syria now has three universities in Damascus, Aleppo and Lattakia, in addition to a number of specialized technological institutes. The number of university students has increased at a rapid rate as seen in this table:

24,09[illegible]	36,761	61,156

There are also thousands of Syrian students studying all over the world. This goes to show the support given by the Government to this important sector, for the economic development depends to a large extent on qualified skilled manpower. Man is the maker of economic development and its [illegible].

Finally it is important to point out that the Public Sector has played the principal role in the economic development because of the absence of the bourgeoisie from this development process. This, however, does not cancel the role of the Private Sector in this process of economic development. Now more than at any other time, this sector is called upon to contribute to the building and progress of Syria's economy. This sector has a definite role to play in agriculture, industry and public services. The Administration calls on all nationals to contribute to Syria's struggle for progress.

The great achievements of the Syrian people during the last six years, whether in the economic development process or in the defense of the country, could not have been made had it not been for their respect and loyalty towards President Assad, and the present stability which Syria lacked for a long time.

The fulfillment of the aims of this ambitious Five-Year Plan offers great opportunities for foreign investments and capital in the building and development sectors. The advantages offered are great, and there are no restrictions.

These considerable economic achievements can not be reached without a genuine peace in the area based on the principles of justice. The just and lasting peace for which Syria is striving aims at the restoration of Arab lands occupied by Israel in its aggression against Syria, Egypt and Jordan in 1967, and the restoration of Palestinians' legal and national rights. This will enable the people of Syria to benefit from the fruits of their efforts and this is the course followed by the Syrian Arab Republic.

About New York

Hockey 'Mongst the Hookers

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

Even between the strolling hookers on Eighth Avenue and the 10th Avenue variety who cater at corners to slow-driving motorists on carnal prowl, childhood can be a meadow, an asphalt meadow.

Minutes after he gets home from school, 14-year-old Brian Mullen suits up in his ragamuffin-eclectic hockey outfit, clambers down in boot roller skates from his fourth-floor tenement apartment and skates past the storefront garage of chestnut and pretzel vending carts and across West 49th Street to get Ralphie, Kenny, Dizzy and the other guys into their daily frenzy of street hockey.

In the early winter nip, it is the fastest game on 49th, faster than the hookers and eternally more innocent. A few hours with Brian as he cuts and checks, feeds and scores, and races back and forth across the schoolyard rink with great whirring strides of joy, is a restorative without equal for anyone wondering lately whether humanity has packaged and peddled itself into a fatally indentured circus.

Brian is a winner—74 goals and 34 assists in the Queens league alone last year. He is so good at roller hockey, leading the forward lines of various pickup church and club teams, that he has graduated to ice skates, being the youngest member of the West Siders ice hockey team, a group that makes the Skyrink on West 33d into a neighborhood shrine on weekends.

With his pumping legs and flicking wrists, Brian is positioning himself to follow in the honored memory of his two older brothers, Tom and Joe, who skated their way from the tenement leagues to the current ice hockey teams at Boston College and American International College in Massachusetts.

Every city neighborhood with children has its all-consuming sport. In this case, hockey has dominated for decades. A laid-off cop returned to a neighborhood game recently and told of his own childhood victories, obviously facing some poignant moment in his life, according to Brother Mark Cavanagh, the coach at Sacred Heart parish, which has fielded powerhouse teams for years.

While all about us there is the depressing TV-induced threat of children wasting away as mere sports spectators, Brian and his friends are living the real life of childhood. And his contests feature such refreshing sights as Puerto Rican hockey players, a development roughly akin to developing a line of Jewish jockeys, and one that surely can be engendered only on the streets of New York. (The kids talk reverently of Egar Alejandro, a tenement alumnus with a great shot who helps coach now at American International College.)

The boys' conversation is routinely raw with sexual denigrations, but Brian seems to pay only half attention, mainly watching the puck and shifting his shoulders and legs fluidly as he stickhandles, somehow keeping the blue hood of his jersey up so he is easy to pick out of the scrapping pack.

Between scrimmages the boys already are building the oral traditions that will comfort them into the future. Ralph Irizarry, Brian's wingmate, expands on the triple overtime victory over College Point a few years ago, and another game where Brian scored two goals in the final 33 seconds for a 6 to 5 victory. "Hey, man, we took them apart."

And the Great Wheel Switch when a terrible 12-to-1 drubbing by a Brooklyn team was followed by the decision to switch to composition wheels instead of the steel ones because of the foreign Brooklyn rink. The result? "We won 6 to 5 in double overtime," says Brian, slapping the remark home like a puck.

The hockey is so intoxicating that it seems to produce extended innocence. "Nah, I gave up drinking," says 22-year-old Kenny Steen, skating alongside Brian and Ralph last week. "I want to keep playing," he continued, his face relaxed and straggly with the need of a shave. "I even go all the way up to Dyckman Street on weekends — those guys are animals," he says appreciatively.

A week ago, Brian had math, Spanish and English to figure into his tragically short hockey evening, and when Ralph asks about some extended play, Brian says, "Well, I got a lot of homework." Ralph responds in the great groaning, nasal objection that has been universal for New York's street children for decades: "C'mon-n-n-n."

Back in the scrimmage, a break-away with Brian up front. He closes on goal guarded by Kenny Byriter, a 14-year-old whose missing tooth (lost, like his soul, to hockey) is shielded from view by his moderately ghastly hockey mask. A cross pass to Ralph who seems to let the defense set on him before flicking the puck back to Brian, who is open and scores as Kenny collapses like a skeleton an instant too late for the block.

The score is a great moment on 49th Street, with dusk already in and the sodium street lights backlighting the players. There is a deep, perfect cold, the kind that produces red noses and serenity. The lights are on in Brian's tenement, dinner is on the stove.

"I gotta go," Ralph says, and he skates east on 49th Street, a scuttling, intense figure leaning forward on his wheels, the lighted skyscrapers of midtown looming beyond Eighth Avenue. Brian plays on, with only a few players and very little talk setting the tone for the final chance, the final burst of motion and scheming as chimney smoke drifts above the tenements. Finally, Brian is spent and hungry and he skates across the stret and walks four flights up to home, still in his skates.

Bridge:

Series of Pair Games Held Limited to Experts Only

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

One of the paradoxes of bridge is that weak players like to play against strong players, although expecting to lose, while strong players do not enjoy playing against weak players, although expecting to win.

Winning against experts is an achievement. Winning against the rank and file is not.

As the experts are in a minority, their wishes are not usually considered by organizers. But one club recently decided to provide for their special requirements, and scheduled a series of special pair games, for experts only and scored by international match points. The second of the series will be played tonight at the Manhattan Club (formerly the Colony Club) at 228 West 71st Street. The first game, played last Thursday, was won by Harold and Joyce Lilie of Woodmere, L.I.

The idea for the game was put forward by Alan Sontag, the Manhattan Club's resident professional as one of the country's top players. He held the East cards on the diagramed deal, and used brilliant reasoning to defeat a three no-trump contract.

Opening Lead Choice Wide

Very light opening bids are acceptable in third seat for lead-directing reasons. Sontag therefore chanced one spade, comforted by the favorable vulnerability. South overcalled one no-trump, which was interpreted by North as showing 15-17 points, slightly less than the standard range. North took a shot at game, and Neil Silverman, as West, had a wide choice of opening leads.

It was clear that East had opened light, so his failure to take pre-emptive action suggested that he did not have more than five spades. The other suits offered better prospects, but the choice between them was tricky. A heart lead was too likely to give the declarer a trick, and would have done so, barring a weird lead of the ten or an even weirder lead of the king.

A club lead did not offer much hope of developing tricks, so he settled for the deuce of diamonds. This set the defense on the road to two tricks in the suit, and turned out to be the only lead to put the contract in jeopardy.

South played low from the dummy, captured East's ten with the king, and led a low spade. The ten was covered with the queen, and when Sont with the king he had somet think about. A Fourth of High School Students In Jersey Found Not to Graduate

TRENTON, Nov. 15 (AP) — A special study shows that nearly one-fourth of all students who enter high schools in New Jersey never graduate.

The New Jersey Study Commission on Adolescent Education also reported yesterday that more than 10 percent of students enrolled in the state's public schools did not attend classes regularly.

The 28-member commission, which was appointed by State Education Commissioner Fred G. Burke to study the impact of problems faced by 12- to 18-year-olds in school, also said juvenile crime had reached a critical stage. The that in 1975, 35.8 percent of arrested for major crimes in were under 18.

"Putting it all together, kids in New Jersey are in trou ways than one, and that we prehensive effort by all segm ciety to find solutions to these a commission spokesman said.

MUNICIPAL LABOR GROUP REJECTS BARGAINING BAN

The Municipal Labor Committee, made up of unions representing more than 200,000 New York City workers, voted unanimously yesterday against a suggestion by Albert Shanker, president of the United Federation of Teachers, that collective bargaining be suspended for the duration of the city's fiscal crisis.

The U.F.T. is not a member of the Municipal Labor Committee, which issued a statement sympathizing with Mr. Shanker's difficulty in settling a contract with the Board of Education but rejecting his idea that a structure like the War Labor Board unilaterally decide on new contract terms. The board was set up during salary levels and, thus, prevent work stoppages due to contract disputes.

"Even during the War Labor Board period," the statement said, "unions flourished and kept collective bargaining alive and productive. At no time in the history of the American labor movement have any of us given up this magnificent trade union right."

Crash and Disaster

By RICHARD WITKIN

THE LAST NINE MINUTES by Moira Johnston. 306 pages. William Morrow & Co. $10.

DESTINATION. DISASTER by Paul Eddy, Elaine Potter, and Bruce Page. 284 pages. Quadrangle/The New York Times Book Company. $12.50.

The occasional airline crash is inevitably a hideous shocker, even though statistics show that a trip by air is much safer than most other types of travel.

In decades past, even into the 1960's, the shock was too often compounded by evidence that a plane had gone down because of a critical defect in design. But the art of engineering has leaped ahead. Today, a fatal design flaw is an extreme rarity, and most crashes can be traced to vicious weather or human error unconnected with design. If a defect does slip through, the engineers will usually have made sure that the hazards would be neutralized by backup mechanisms or other safety valves.

Tragically, this was not the case with the original McDonnell Douglas DC-10 jumbos jets. Specifically, it was not the case with a Turkish Airlines DC-10 operated to Western Europe on March 3, 1974.

At about 12,000 feet, shortly after takeoff from Paris on a flight to London, the plane's rear cargo door blew out, and the abrupt loss of pressure in the cargo hold caused the floor of the still-pressurized passenger cabin above to buckle into the hold. The collapsing floor severely damaged vital control cables. The plane smashed into a forest, killing all 346 persons on board. The toll was, and is, a record for an air accident.

The reconstruction of what happened, and why, are at the core of these two thoroughly engrossing and impressively documented new books. As both make clear, what stunned the aviation world was not so much that a new airliner could be downed by a design flaw. What was so appalling was that the flaw, far from being a suddenly-discovered problem, had been terrifyingly spotlighted in a near-crash two years before, and that the industry-government system had permitted the needed fixes to be implemented in a scandalously slipshod fashion.

How did this come about? The investigation and lawsuits showed many shared the blame for the disaster.

One Needed Change

The manufacturer, McDonnell Douglas, failed to carry out at least one vital change on the Turkish plane—a fix devised to make it impossible to force a correctly rigged cargo door to close improperly. There was some evidence that the door had, in fact, been misrigged, though who was responsible is in dispute.

There was much more. After the near-crash of 1972, which was precipitated when a cargo door was blown off a DC-10 over Windsor, Canada, the high command at McDonnell Douglas and the Federal Aviation Administration reached a "gentleman's agreement" on door changes that in effect softpedaled their urgency. The National Transportation Safety Board, understaffed and distracted by an internal struggle over Nixon Administration interference with its overall operations, did not monitor the F.A.A.'s activities on the DC-10 case as closely as it should have.

General Dynamics, subcontractor on the cargo door, sat on a disturbing internal memo written after the Windsor incident. In it, a high-level engineer said additional DC-10 crashes resulting from cargo-door loss seemed to him "inevitable" over the next 20 years, and he urged his superiors to persuade McDonnell Douglas to make more fundamental DC-10 changes than door modifications.

The engineer's boss rejected the idea. He suggested that such an approach might mean that General Dynamics would have to assume all or much of the high cost, and added: "We have an interesting legal and moral problem." Well, he was certainly right about that.

Both books, while bringing excessive gore to descriptions of the crash scene, wisely avoid being shrill in deploring the actions that made the disaster—hopefully a one-time aberration—possible. Moira Johnston's "The Last Nine Minutes" is written with greater emotion, and is more involving because it is so deeply concerned with the impact of a wholesale tragedy on devastated individuals. She has very sensitively interlaced technical developments with sometimes unbearably poignant accounts of how the victims' survivors coped with the initial shock and tried, with the help of friends and of their lawyers, to rebuild their lives.

Broader Coverage

"Destination Disaster," by a London Sunday Times team, covers a broader landscape. It probes harder into the past for the factors that might explain continuing hazards. It urges resumption of Congressional inquiry to answer persisting questions about the Paris crash and to decide how Federal safety regulation might be improved. "It is clear from an examination of the DC-10 affair," the authors contend, "that there are serious weaknesses in the American regulatory system." Few experts would disagree.

One matter logically singled out for Congressional inquiry is the puzzle of how McDonnell Douglas's official records could show that the key fix had been made on the Turkish plane's cargo door when, in fact, the wreckage proved this was not so. Among the few lapses in Miss Johnston's book, aside from the regrettable lack of an index, is its brushing over this nagging issue.

The major lapse in the British book is a well-intentioned but grossly misleading appendix section rating the world's airlines on the basis of their safety records. But, in their verdict on the Paris crash, the Britishers have incisively captured the meaning of the Paris crash:

"Nations, certainly, would not survive if they could not, at times, provide special moral frames within which ordinarily sane and decent people will cheat, lie, and even kill. 'If we did for ourselves what we are doing for Italy,' said Count Cavour, 'what shocking rascals we should be.'

"Corporations, especially the large and complex ones with which we have to live, now appear to possess some of the qualities of nation states—including, perhaps, an alarming capacity to insulate their members from the moral consequences of their actions. It may be an inevitable tendency: It is nonetheless one which needs to be watched, understood, and controlled. The story of the DC-10, and of the disaster of March 3, 1974, may be understood in terms of men who did things 'for Italy' that they would never have done for themselves."

Unofficial Count Shows Meeds Washington Victor Over Garner

EVERETT, Wash., Nov. 15 (UPI)—Representative Lloyd Meeds, Democrat of Washington, has retained his seat in Congress, according to final unofficial returns from Washington's Second Congressional District, ending up with a 372-vote margin over John Nance Garner.

An automatic recount of vote will be required under state law, however, since the margin is less than one-half of one percent.

The outcome of the races had hung in the balance nearly two weeks after the Nov. 2 general election as absentee ballots were counted throughout the counties in the district.

Mr. Garner, distant descendant of the Vice President of the same name, had held a narrow lead the day after the election.

Mr. Carter's World

World events and the world's leaders have been kind to the United States in this election year. No major crisis thrust itself into the Presidential contest. The candidates were able largely to ignore turbulence on the international scene, such as China's leadership change, civil war in Lebanon, elections in Italy and West Germany, Britain's economic plunge and Europe's monetary disorder. But pressures now building in these and other areas will require Presidential decisions in the early weeks of the Carter Administration.

A rapprochement with Peking has been sought by Moscow with increasing zeal since Mao Tse-tung's death and state-to-state contacts are likely to improve slowly, despite ideological disputes. This does not suggest any need for panic in Washington. China's pragmatic leaders are unlikely to abandon the triangular relationship with the United States and Russia that has served Chinese as well as American interests since 1971. But the balance could shift gradually to the American disadvantage.

Soviet-American relations thus could readily be affected. Moves to reinforce Soviet interest in détente and restraint are essential. If the strategic arms limitation treaty (SALT II), shelved for almost a year by President Ford, is to be concluded rapidly, Pentagon opposition will have to be overcome or overruled. Together with a new move on trade and credits, undertaken with Congressional accord, a SALT treaty could lay the basis for the long-delayed meeting that Mr. Brezhnev wants. In return, there could be pressure on Moscow to carry out its pledges to reduce the Cuban expeditionary force in Angola that, otherwise, might turn up elsewhere in southern Africa.

Before meeting with Mr. Brezhnev, President Carter will want to meet with his allies. There is much to be said for another economic summit on the pattern of Rambouillet and Puerto Rico—but this time involving the Common Market, as well as the national leaders of Europe and Japan. It would permit political consultation as well as economic decisions to reverse the trend toward renewed world recession. If the drift toward Communist participation in the Governments of Italy and France is not to become irreversible, the economic atmosphere in Europe must be altered. Economic leadership from Washington could also pave the way for a new approach to West Germany and France to halt the export of reprocessing plants, which fabricate plutonium for nuclear bombs.

A new move to negotiate a Mideast settlement is vital to defuse the world's most explosive region, even if substantial progress is unlikely before the Israeli elections in October. New proposals are needed to revive the stalemated North-South dialogue in Paris, bogged down on issues of third-world debts and commodities.

The Ford Administration's defense budget will require overhaul, with multiple decisions on the B-1 strategic bomber, the cruise missile, the MX mobile ICBM, the Trident submarine, terminally guided warheads and other weapons systems that could prejudice arms control prospects.

The pressure for vital international decisions which will not only shape the course of the new Administration but affect the fortunes of all nations clearly makes the selection of talented and experienced aides in the areas of diplomacy, defense, intelligence and arms control a task of utmost urgency as Mr. Carter prepares to assume his awesome responsibilities.

Consensus Statement

The part played by the United States in arriving at the United Nations Security Council's unanimous "consensus statement" on Israeli occupation of Arab territories was entirely constructive, and deserved praise instead of the rather hysterical blame it has received.

It is generally agreed—by Israeli diplomats among others—that the moderating influence of Ambassador Scranton and the American delegation succeeded in achieving a far less harshly worded statement than would otherwise have been the case. In fact, the statement, critical as it is of the Israeli settlement policy in occupied territories, is in complete conformity with the previously expressed American position on this issue.

While it is obvious that the Israeli Government would bitterly object to any statement criticizing such settlements and other facets of its occupation, it is equally obvious—or should be—that the most useful thing the United States could do would be what it did do: exercise its influence on the side of restraint, while at the same time—without sacrificing the friendship of Israel—trying to maintain a tenable relationship with the more moderate Arabs by demonstrating that this country was not automatically hostile to whatever position they might take.

If there is to be any hope at all that the United States will retain some leverage in advancing negotiations toward a peace in the Middle East, the United States must have the confidence of both sides; and it cannot have that unless it is perceived by both to be able to form its own independent judgments. It is in the interest neither of the United States nor Israel to demand—or to expect—any less.

Northeastern Agenda

Governor Carey's dream of forging a strong regional alliance to press for more Federal aid for the depressed Northeast moved a big step forward last weekend at a conference in Saratoga Springs sponsored by the infant Coalition of Northeastern Governors.

The agenda for Federal action drawn up by the Governors will not be easy to fulfill. But officials in Washington cannot fail to be impressed by the uniformity of purpose displayed by the highly individualistic leaders of seven diverse states and by the quality of research and thought that went into recommendations in such key areas as welfare reform, employment, energy and transportation. Certainly if the Governors meet with Mr. Carter next month, as expected, they will find considerable common ground in such areas as welfare reform and the creation of jobs, to which both have given high priority.

The more difficult task may be selling the Northeastern agenda to Congress. Much will depend on the effectiveness of a newly formed coalition of Congressmen from the Northeast, on their ability to form working alliances with members from other regions to promote common concerns, and to stand firmly together in bargaining with other regions to gain for the Northeast a fairer share in all Federal programs.

Part of the solution can be found in a concerted effort at mutual self-help, such as Felix Rohatyn's plan for a Regional Energy Development Corporation which Mr. Carter's representative hailed as a potential "centerpiece" for Northeastern revival. Although the corporation will require Federal help in the form of bond guarantees, its success depends predominantly on local initiative and cooperation. Not only New York and New Jersey but all of the coalition should be involved in planning for this vital common enterprise.

Electoral College Reform

The closeness of the vote in the Presidential election has once again revived interest in reform or abolition of the Electoral College.

President-elect Carter pointed out in a post-election news conference that his winning majority of 51 percent is substantially greater than the percentage of the popular vote attained by other recent Presidents such as Harry Truman in 1948, John F. Kennedy in 1960, and Richard Nixon in 1968. Indeed, leaving aside Lyndon Johnson's 1964 landslide, he is the first Democrat to obtain a clear majority of the popular vote since Franklin D. Roosevelt won in 1944.

Nevertheless, the country in this election narrowly escaped an anomalous or awkward outcome. If Mr. Ford had carried New York, he would have achieved an Electoral College majority even though he still trailed by approximately one and one-half million votes. This anomaly did occur in 1888. Or, the shift of a few thousand votes in Delaware and Ohio would have produced a tie—269 votes each—in the Electoral College and sent the election to the House of Representatives for decision.

Once an election goes to the House—as it did in 1824 and 1876—the numerous opportunities for delay and manipulation are clearly worrisome. The new House does not meet until early January, barely two weeks before the President is to be inaugurated. Moreover, the members of the House would not vote as individuals but are required by the Constitution to vote as state delegations, opening up the prospect of deadlock if many delegations are evenly divided between the parties.

It is against this background of potentially harmful delays and complex contingencies that the demand arises for outright abolition of the Electoral College. Yet, reliance on the popular vote alone does not guarantee simplicity and dependability. According to a study by the Library of Congress, only 16 states have laws that specifically provide for recounting the vote cast for President. If the nationwide vote were close, there would be demands for recounts in many states and districts. This could, in turn, lead to demands for Federalization of the entire electoral process. Abolition of the Electoral College and uniform Federal election rules would thus mean a further decline in the authority of the states and homogenizing of the American system of government, a trend that would be welcomed by some and deplored by others.

Major efforts in Congress to alter the workings of the Electoral College or to substitute direct election of Presidents have come to nought. No action has been taken because there has been no consensus on the political consequences for liberals and conservatives if the Presidential voting system were altered and also because of a reluctance to drop or change radically an arrangement which, notwithstanding its defects, usually works well.

In Electoral College reform—as in the reform of campaign spending—the best is often the enemy of the good. Rather than make a drive for abolition of the Electoral College or for its radical transformation—a drive that might fall short of its goal once a proposed constitutional amendment reached the state legislatures for ratification—reformers should perhaps first concentrate on eliminating two widely recognized risks.

If the electoral votes of a state were cast by a designated official and the merely honorific post of elector abolished, that would eliminate the problem of individual electors voting contrary to the will of the people in that state. Secondly, the Constitution could be changed to provide that in the event an election goes to the House of Representatives, the members would vote as individuals, thereby eliminating the problem of equally divided state delegations. These are small improvements but they should not be delayed simply because there is lacking the necessary overwhelming majority in favor of drastic change.

Letters to the Editor

Of India's Course and the U.S.

To the Editor:

As one with a long interest in India who has had the privilege of meeting Mrs. Gandhi on several occasions, may I attempt to put political developments there into some perspective.

Americans who now lament India's forsaking of democracy, and it is indeed regrettable, are too prone, however, to overlook the niggardly encouragement that the U.S. has given this young nation in becoming a viable democratic state, both before and after its independence. Prior to its freedom, U.S. policy on India was to have no policy, and, moreover, we delayed tragically exerting pressure on Britain to extend freedom. Since independence, we have blown hot and cold in our political relationships and diplomatic postures. We have not consistently treated this strategic nation as an outpost of the free world when even our own interests dictated so doing. So Mrs. Gandhi's cynicism about the genuineness of our laments over the fate of democracy in India is not without basis.

As much as I wish Mrs. Gandhi had continued on the pathway of democracy, I do not see her in the image of totalitarian leaders of our own era, Hitler, Mussolini, Stalin, Franco and company. I am prepared, also, to believe she has not betrayed the essential principles of her illustrious father or her mentor, Mahatma Gandhi, as I think she is as deeply committed as they to true freedom in India.

I accept her contention that swifter progress must be made in overcoming India's gargantuan internal problems and nothing, even the democratic process, alas, can stand in the way of attaining this goal. Her conviction that India's adherence to democracy was not, and is not, redeemable in substantial and assured American or Western European aid in solving these problems is understandable. To write India off, as now seems to be the U.S. disposition, will only contribute to the foreclosure of India's re-emergence into the free world.

GORDON B. HALSTEAD
Peru, Vt., Nov. 8, 1976

To the Editor:

While 200 million Americans elected their President, 600 million Indians were denied again their right to choose their leaders.

Contrary to popular belief, Indians have generally exercised their voting rights in greater percentages than citizens in many developed countries. The Indian masses may be poor, uneducated and unsophisticated in the Western sense, but they are not stupid. Mrs. Gandhi realizes this, hence the repeated postponement of elections.

Unfortunately, many Americans and Westernized Indians continue to believe that democracy and universal adult franchise cannot work in poor and developing countries. This persistent elitist attitude is no different from the racist rationalization of Western colonialists of yesteryear.

Now, the long arm of Mrs. Gandhi's secret police (R.A.W.) is making its presence felt in this country. R.A.W. agents are being assigned to the embassies and consulates in increasing numbers to intimidate Indian dissidents living abroad. In this country, they will join the successful penetration by the K.C.I.A. (South Korea) and SAVAK (Iran). Whereas the latter are the offspring of the American C.I.A., parallel its methods and have been tolerated here, the former was inspired by and structured on the Soviet Union's K.G.B. In fact, the treaty between the Indian and Soviet Governments provides for mutual exchanges.

The K.C.I.A. and SAVAK are already well entrenched. The perils of tolerating such activities because they are directed toward aliens or recent citizens for some supposed security interests with allies can be well seen by the recent revelations regarding South Korea. It is to be hoped that the new Secretary of State will not let morality and human rights be sacrificed on the altar of political expediency.

Electoral Mathematics

To the Editor:

The closeness of the recent Presidential election raises again the specter of a divided verdict; the possibility that one candidate wins in the Electoral College while the other wins the popular vote.

As a mathematician who has done research on the effect of the Electoral College system, I have computed estimates for the likelihood that a divided verdict occurs in a Presidential election. If the popular vote margin is 2.2 percent of the votes cast (Carter's margin over Ford), the estimate for the probability of a divided verdict is 23 percent, i.e., about one chance in four. If the popular vote margin is .2 percent (as in 1960), the probability of a divided verdict would be 47 percent. These values are based on the empirical record by modeling state voting patterns over the twentieth century by normal distributions.

One may also estimate the likelihood that a third-party candidate prevent an Electoral College majority. Assuming a major party popular vote margin of .8 percent (as in 1968) and 46 electoral votes for the third-party candidate (equal to Wallace's total in that year), the probabilities are as follows: Electoral vote winner wins popular vote: 37 percent; divided verdict: 20 percent; no Electoral College majority: 43 percent.

It is a matter of luck that all three of the close Presidential elections during the past two decades have produced clear-cut winners who have appeared to lead the popular vote. Any decision concerning retention of the Electoral College system must take into account quantitative estimates of the many subtle effects of this peculiar method for counting the votes.

In Defense of Bilingual Education

To the Editor:

Henry M. Gould's Nov. 3 letter questioning the efficacy of bilingual education on "pedagogical grounds" runs counter to current opinion in education. Studies such as the Fleischmann Report (1972), the Coleman Report (1964) as well as the Fishman Study (1972) all point not only to the viability but also the desirability of bilingual education. Other studies show that bilingual education is not confusing and more helpful than the old-style immersion method.

Mr. Gould points to his experience in a class of Yiddish- and Polish-speaking students in 1913, taught monolingually, and states that ". . . we had no bilingual classes at that time." The fact is that the Board of Education's predecessor did indeed recognize the value of bilingual education in New York City's public schools in 1837, when a full year of subject-matter instruction in German for the children of German immigrants was offered. Before the anti-German backlash triggered by World War I produced a spate of laws requiring public school instruction in English only, bilingual programs flourished in all parts of the country. Since 1972, ten states have adopted legislation specifically mandating bilingual education, and many more enacted laws permitting local school districts to provide bilingual education. In addition, the Board of Education of New York City agreed that bilingual education is pedagogically sound when it signed the Bilingual Consent Decree in August 1974.

Notwithstanding any of the above, the key question we must consider is: Are we as a society willing to accept the notion of a child not learning mathematics, science and social studies for a number of years, and therefore retarding that child's educational progress for the sake of a pure English-language instructional method?

ASPIRA of New York, the plaintiff in the Federal court case mentioned by Mr. Gould, feels that we cannot ignore the needs of 300,000 Hispanic children in our city's public school system. An exclusively monolingual method will waste the lives of tens of thousands of young people needlessly.

More Carrots, No Appeasement

By Liane Ellison Norman

PITTSBURGH — While chopping vegetables the other night, I listened to the radio. The question was, who might succeed Mr. Kissinger? Suddenly, I thought, "Why shouldn't I be his successor?"

"Nonsense," said the voice on the radio. The next Secretary of State must have splendid qualifications! He must be schooled by the Ivy League, befriended by powerful men, published by learned journals. Such a man would not chop onions! But, I thought, who says those are the best qualifications? Why assume that a man so credentialed is the best able to do the job?

The radio went on to other things, the vegetables went into the soup, but the thought persisted. "What!" Hannibal Persiflage, the pundit, would thunder. "Foreign policy is no laughing matter!" For the prevailing wisdom is that foreign affairs are more solemn than domestic ones. Phoebe Rankle says Jimmy Carter should not have "smirked" in the second television debate, because it was about matters of foreign policy. And it is a solemn thing to have it so nearly in one's power to make war.

Yet too much seriousness is a danger. Charlotte Brontë wrote that the great man "forgets, pitilessly, the feelings and claims of little people, in pursuing his own large views . . . . The insignificant [must] keep out of his way; lest, in his progress, he should trample them down."

"That's the problem," I thought. The Secretary of State is so taken with large views that he cannot help but get carried away, losing his sense of proportion. Everything in the world seems his affair and a matter of life and death."

I asked my friend Jo Simplesmith, a recognized genius, what she thought. She whooped in delight. "But, Madame Secretary, how will you keep from getting infected with large views?"

"I thought of that," I said. "First, I'd work as Secretary of State only part-time."

"Yes," murmured Jo, "overwork often looks like seriousness. A lot of bad policy is made by tired, self-important people, yet because they have position their affliction is seen as health."

I reminded Jo that much foreign policy exists to assert, consolidate and expand claims to empire. Less foreign policy altogether would require simpler tastes and lower consumption, for great affluence and high profits mean empire. Empire means intervention. Intervention means war (or the threat thereof). A part-time Secretary's foreign policy would be less, and of necessity, closer to home. "A Secretary who served half-time," I pointed out, "would be only half as dangerous."

"And here is the great point," I told Jo. "No Secretary of State who is a mother could think of power in the abstract."

Jo clapped her hands and waxed oratorical. "Yes," she said, "the men, like Abraham, sacrifice our sons in obedience to promptings they call holy. As Secretary of State, you could not make any policy that sent your children as the state's hired guns."

"Indeed not," I said, "and the world is full of children, so how could I explain to mine the proposition that they are or ought to be Number One?"

Jo added, "Or how could you explain a 'national security' that means they are entitled to more wealth, resources, energy, prestige than kids in other countries? Or a policy that uses violence to show who's boss, when you don't allow the use of force at home?"

"Okay," she said, "what will you do first, on taking office?"

"Oh, maybe call a press conference," I pondered, "and declare that the Indochina war was wrong. Announce that the Government should ask the people's pardon for the abuse of democratic process in that war; for the death, injury, dislocation, and exile of its sons; for the damage done to Indochinese lives and soil. Announce the provision of reconstruction aid to Indochina (and, of course, welcome information about the M.I.A.'s). Say that foreign policy will recognize that power has limits, as do the officials who wield it. And announce my motto, from Shakespeare, that "the abuse of greatness is when it disjoins remorse from power."

The children burst in, just then, hungry and full of chatter. Foreign policy had to wait.

Medical Deans' Revolt

By Harry Schwartz

SAN FRANCISCO—The deans of most United States medical schools joined together here the other day to open the latest front of the general war against the ever more intrusive dictation from Congress and the bureaucracy in Washington.

Congress's order that a group of students be admitted to medical schools was the specific issue that touched off the deans' revolt at the annual convention of the Association of American Medical Colleges. But this was merely the straw that broke this particular camel's back.

Cynics, of course, will say that the medical school deans want the impossible. The deans welcome the rich flow of Federal and state millions that make the medical schools' operations possible, but they don't want the pipers who pay the bills to call the times to which the schools must dance.

This assessment is probably overly harsh. The medical schools have tried hard to meet the social demands put upon them this last decade and to give good value for their money.

Thus in the last 10 years or so, for example, the nation's medical school enrollment and the annual number of American physicians graduating have roughly doubled. So efficiently and quickly has the production of doctors been raised in this country that Prof. Eli Ginzberg of Columbia University's Graduate School of Business warned the medical school officials here that a staggering surplus of doctors is just over the horizon. By the early 1980's, Professor Ginzberg estimated, this country will have many more doctors relative to population than any of the world's other industrialized nations that are trying to give their citizens first-class modern scientific medical care.

The medical school leaders feel that they have served the nation well in other areas as well. They have substantially increased the number of minority and women medical students, even at the cost of giving the former preference over some highly qualified applicants who happen to be of the "wrong" sex or race.

The medical research accomplishments of the country's medical schools have already made the United States far and away the world leader in the fight against disease and death. The record of Nobel Prize winners in medicine since World War II is, to an amazingly great extent, primarily a list of individuals who have taught at, or been trained by, or who have done their research at American medical schools.

What drives the medical school deans beside themselves, however, is the constant evidence they see that, no matter what they accomplish, those who control the monetary strings in Washington and in the state capitals are never satisfied and keep on posing ever-more demands, many of them frequently mutually contradictory.

Some of the anger of many of the deans is directed at particularly powerful governmental figures who are seen as having a dangerous taste for meddling in medical school affairs to an extent far beyond those individuals' knowledge and competence. In Washington, Senator Edward M. Kennedy is often named in this connection. In New York State, the man most often blamed is Dr. Kevin Cahill, Governor Carey's chief adviser on state medical policy.

Finally, the medical schools' patience is being tried beyond endurance by the proliferating labyrinth of laws and regulations that Congress and the bureaucrats have spewed out in an effort to control medical care costs and to impose government control over the future growth of the American medical system. Whatever Congress's original intent, this infinitely complicated web of regulations and laws always seems to entangle the medical schools most and to threaten very seriously both their solvency and their ability to do their job.

It is a symptom of the timidity of the medical school deans that when their revolt against bureaucratic oppression finally erupted these last several days, it was not over any of the great issues that really endanger the future of American medical education, but on the minor issue of the relative handful of Americans studying abroad.

Congress has directed the medical schools to admit these students after two years of foreign study if the individuals involved can pass a certain specified national medical competency examination. These students and their parents are apparently the only group the medical school deans feel it politically wise to challenge openly. After all, this group consists of a relatively small number of people, the students involved are predominantly white and predominantly male, and they and their families are relatively affluent. In short they don't have too fearsome a political "clout."

On Beating Grandmother

By Russell Baker

Another problem we have in New York is children beating up grandmothers. Sometimes they kill them, although the usual thing is just robbery. Sometimes the children are quite young. Ten, twelve, thirteen years old. Sometimes the grandmothers are old enough to be great-grandmothers. The other day two pubescent boys did a street-mugging job on a woman who later told policemen she was 103.

This may have been a new record for assault across the ages. You can't be sure. If such records are kept at all, they are bound to be unreliable, since we go for long periods here in New York of not being interested enough in this kind of assault to keep the records very well. Right now, everyone is excited about children brutalizing old people and we keep a keen eye for records, the better to savor the excitement of the moment.

Next week, the week after, there will be a new problem. Battered babies, botulism, infectious arson, police disgruntlement, rampant venereal disease. Something. But this week, all attention focuses on beaten grandmothers and insensitive childhood, and everyone is solicitous of the terror in which old people now live. The police, of course, will make special efforts. City Hall expresses concern. Cries of public outrage. Etc.

Next week we will have the same responses for the new problem, but there is no point in being cynical about the ease with which New York transfers its alarm from one insoluble problem to another. In a city this size a problem is very lucky indeed to get a whole week's play in the news; most problems are lucky to get ten seconds on the local TV roundups.

In any case, one of the things you do here when there is a heavy problem in the news is leap to sociological conclusions about What It All Means (W.I.A.M.). The battered-grandmother movement is particularly ripe for such speculation, since almost any conclusion you leap to is bound to touch on some of New York's most sensitive nerves and guarantee a satisfying argument that will take everybody's mind off the batterings of old people.

My own inclination, for example, would be to explain this kind of crime in terms of family breakdown. Even a child reared by criminal parents will be taught a decent respect for old people, if only out of self-serving motives in his felonious parents, who, anticipating dotage, will want the successor generation of criminals to do the decent thing by their forebears.

It is reasonable to conclude that most criminal parents upon learning that a child of theirs has beaten and robbed a grandmother, would give him such a forceful lesson in the nastiness of abusing the elderly that he would never do it again. The fact that this crime is gaining popularity among New York children suggests that either they have no families to underline such lessons, or that the families they have are no longer doing their jobs.

That suggestion will irritate certain modern thinkers who contend that the family is obsolete and—worse—a social prison in which the creative impulses of its members are stifled.

Persons who believe there is no such thing as a bad boy may be even more annoyed. I don't want to suggest that strong family discipline will stop these street criminals from proceeding into a life of crime, but only that family can turn their natural criminal inclinations toward activities less odious to society.

This suggestion is based on a recognition of the limits of family power. It assumes a certain number of bad people in the world. If you happen to get one born into your family there is no reason why the family should be blamed. The best the family can do is to channel criminal impulses into something relatively respectable, such as safecracking or political bribery, and pray for the best.

What we now have in New York is a lot of really rotten kids exposing their true nature because family influence has failed to train them to conceal it. The percentage of really rotten people on earth has probably been constant over the millenia; the barbaric periods differ from the civilized by the breakdown of constraints which, in civilized times, keep the bad people from behaving perfectly naturally.

The most romantic interpretation of the perils of New York's old people is that it is an expression of America's contempt for or hatred of old age, and its idiotic worship of youth. This strikes me as great fun to argue over gin, but pretty silly. Americans may do ridiculous things, like installing new glands and putting 44-inch waistlines into custom-faded jeans, in order to hold onto the memory of youth. The number of us who beat the daylights out of grandmothers is, however, infinitesimal.

When you find a couple of lads born in the age of L.B.J. assaulting a woman born in the Administration of Ulysses S. Grant, it is just as sensible to argue that today's youth is reacting in rage against the corruption of the Grant gang as to contend that it is expressing a national contempt for old folks. What we have are some very bad children who lack the family background required to channel their felonious instincts into more socially acceptable activities.

Coal. We're making a good thing even better.

The Southern Company is committed to coal. More than 80 percent of the electricity generated by the Southern electric system comes from coal — the only abundant fossil fuel that will carry this country to the Electric Economy.

It's also true that environmental regulations place stringent limits on emissions from new power plants which burn coal. Right now, there are only two ways to handle this: burn limited and expensive low-sulfur coal. Or install additional anti-pollution devices — costly in dollars and operating efficiency.

But we may have a third option — remove the pollutants from coal before it is burned. It can be done through solvent refining — a process developed by the Southern electric system with the cooperation of the Electric Power Research Institute and the Energy Research and Development Administration. Solvent-refined coal is clean enough to meet the Environmental Protection Agency's standards for clean air — without the use of extra pollution-control equipment.

There is a cost involved. But if solvent-refined coal can be commercialized, it promises to be less expensive than other alternatives. That's why we are encouraging the development of a commercial production facility to convert large quantities of coal to clean fuel through solvent refining.

By 1985, the Southern electric system will be burning 50 million tons of coal a year. We are committed to getting the best out of coal — a clean fuel for the Electric Economy.

Of all the magazines studied in both the current 1976/1977 Simmons Audience Study and the previous one, FIELD & STREAM gained more total adult readers and more adult male readers than any other magazine.

Was this just circulation growth? Partly. But other magazines have grown more in circulation, yet not increased their readers per copy or total audience as dramatically.

Was it a statistical fluke? Probably not, since FIELD & STREAM'S growth was one of the largest, both in total audience and in key demographics in the 1974/1975 Simmons study. And, as Frank Stanton, President of the W.R. Simmons Company says, "Generally, magazines that did well among younger and more affluent people two years ago, continued to do well in the new study."

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—Everyone said the "Treasures of Tutankhamen" show would be magnificent, and everyone was right.

Few exhibitions in recent museum history have been as avidly awaited, or indeed, as aggresively touted in advance, as this selection of Egyptian antiquities that opens tomorrow at the National Gallery of Art on the first leg of a nationwide tour. But those with high expectations resulting from all this hoopla will not be disappointed.

These "Treasures" are not only of great historical rarity; they are also objects of great esthetic splendor. Although the exhibition, which consists of 55 works, is not a large one by the standards set by recent blockbuster shows, and the objects themselves are small in size, their beauty is breathtaking.

The exhibition gains much, of course, from the romance attending the discovery of Tutankhamen's tomb. It was in November 1922 that the British archeologist Howard Carter and his sponsor, the fifth Earl of Carnarvon, first uncovered the objects that had remained concealed for more than 2,000 years. This was one of the stellar events in the history of modern archeology—for unlike the tombs of other Egyptian kings, Tutankhamen's was essentially intact—and has ever since retained an almost mythical status.

This aura of myth and romance is very much a part of the present exhibition—perhaps too much a part of the exhibition. By means of didactic charts, photographic blowups and extended captions on the walls, the visitor to the "Treasures" show is given a quick course in the history of ancient Egypt and a dramatic account of the tomb's discovery.

But all of this is ancillary to our experience of the objects on view. In the presence of these masterpieces, which represent an artistry unknown to modern times, the travails of archeology lose their relevance. It is as an exhibition of art, not of history, that "Tutankhamen" captivates the mind and bedazzles the senses.

The carved alabaster vases, for example, afford one of the most sublime experiences of the art of sculpture—of sculpture that seems to be carved not so much of stone as of light—to be found in the entire history of art. One of these carvings in particular—a floral unguent vase elaborated with the most delicate open-form traceries of curved slender masses—boasts a refinement not seen again until the Christian Middle Ages in Europe, and not really exceeded even in the masterworks of that legendary era.

The gold sculptures also offer us a variety of sculptural experience like no other that we know. Some are made of actual gold, hammered into forms both powerful and exquisite, and embellished with the most stunning ornament. But others, even more interesting to this observer, are actually gilded wood carvings—splendid, intricate examples of a genre, that of painted sculpture, in which the anonymous artists of ancient Egypt particularly excelled.

One of the most magnificent of these is the figure of the goddess Selket—especially dramatic for the way the eyes, painted in bold black outlines, stare at us from the noble gold head. Another, even grander example, is the figure of Tutankhamen himself, here shown with a harpoon in his right hand in a rare scene of action.

There are also necklaces, furniture, crooks, chests, daggers and bracelets, even an ivory headrest consisting of a figure flanked by two lions that uphold this same exalted standard of refined artistry. We look, we admire, and we are finally staggered at the thought that so much that is so inspired was intended never again to be seen by the human eye once its purpose had been fulfilled.

As the "Treasures" are installed at the National Gallery, we experience them, of course, as modern objects, not as ancient relics. The light that transforms those alabaster vases is the light of modern display technology — it has nothing to do with the light (or the dark) of ancient Egypt. The dazzling gold surfaces of the sculptures are likewise a "fiction" wrought by modern museology. We have, in a sense, transformed the "Treasures of Tutankhamen" into something they never were—an art to serve the modern appetite for esthetic delectation.

Bardyl R. Tirana, co-chairman of the Carter inaugural committee, met with the President-elect for an hour and a half last Friday in Plains, Ga., to discuss plans for the event.

"We're planning an inauguration which is traditional but modest in one, not extravagant," Mr. Tirana said. Mr. Carter's greatest concern is that "we reach the maximum number of people possible and involve the whole country in the inauguration. He wants to receive anyone who comes to Washington for the inauguration," Mr. Tirana added.

He said that on the morning of the inauguration, Mr. Carter would attend a Baptist service in Washington—the specific church has not been disclosed —then proceed to the Capitol to take the oath of office.

There are likely to be far fewer ceremonial events requiring special invitation cards as well as a large cash outlay. "The substantive difference is that there are going to be a lot of parties," Mr. Kieves said. Some will probably be in public buildings and others will undoubtedly be at hotels, he added.

Another substantive difference will be that the parties are likely to be inexpensive, as such things go, costing perhaps $25 a ticket, and featuring cash bars and perhaps "cash food."

The inaugural parade, Mr. Kieves said, is planned to run a maximum of 2 and 2½ hours. "We'll make 'em move faster," and there are plans, too, to "keep the military presence [in the parade] to a minimum," he added.

At the 1973 $4 million inauguration, ball tickets ranged from $40 to $1,000 for a box, with drinks $1.50 apiece.

In foreign policy, Mr. Carter urged oil-exporting countries not to raise prices at their meeting next month and said he would feel free to renegotiate any accords already made with the Russians on strategic arms. [34:1-2.]

• The comparatively low turnout in the Presidential election was apparently due to demographic factors such as the sharp increase of young people in the electorate rather than disillusionment, according to a New York Times and CBS News survey. • A Postal Service surplus for the first time since the agency was set up in 1971 was reported for the months of July, August and September. Illegal kickbacks from commercial suppliers are widespread in New York State's health-care system, it was charged by the state's special nursing-home prosecutor, Charles J. Hynes. He also announced indictments of 26 persons involved with nursing homes and said that half the 125 nursing homes in the metropolitan area might be involved in kickback schemes. [1:4.]

• The indictment of Stanley Steingut, Speaker of the State Assembly, and his son Robert, a City Councilman, on charges of corruptly offering a job for a campaign contribution, was thrown out by the Appellate Division of State Supreme Court in Brooklyn. The five judges ruled unanimously that Manhattan courts had jurisdiction because, if the alleged misconduct took place at all, which the Steinguts deny, it had occurred there. District Attorney Eugene Gold of Brooklyn said he planned an appeal. [1:5.]

• Robert T. Groh has been indicted on charges of bribery and grand larceny in an alleged $10,000 political payoff in Queens for a motel zoning change. Mr. Groh is a former Sanitation Commissioner in New York City and former Queens Deputy Borough President. The indictments, expected to be announced today, were voted by a grand jury that heard evidence from the office of John F. Keenan, the special state anticorruption prosecutor. [22:4-5.]

• Auto-insurance rates are determined under a system based in part on faulty statistics, according to increasing evidence. New studies also suggest that rate schedules unfairly burden young men and residents of New York City, who pay much more for auto insurance than drivers over 30 and rural upstate residents. Industry officials maintain that the rate structure is based on hard statistical evidence that certain groups are more likely to be involved in accidents, and that good drivers are not forced to subsidize bad ones. [1:2-4.]

Business/Finance

Industrial production fell in October for the second successive month, the Federal Reserve Board reported. The decline was five-tenths of 1 percent from September, which was revised downward. Less than one-third of the October drop was attributed to strikes and the rest of it to reduced demand. [55:5-6.]

• American new car sales for Nov. 1-10 slipped 1.5 percent from a year earlier due in part to what analysts said was the impact of the Ford Motor Company strike. However, auto executives still expect the domestic share of the 1976 market to show a 25 percent gain over last year, to 8.8 million cars. [55:1-2.]

• Stock prices gained moderately in continued slow trading. The Dow Jones industrial average rose 7.73 points to close at 935.42, its high for the session. [55:4.] In credit markets, fixed-income security prices made a moderate advance and short-term interest rates eased a little. [59:1-3.] Soybean futures tumbled, dragging most other commodities, except wheat, lower. [64:4.]

Quotation of the Day

"Authors of such fairy tales try to present Yugoslavia as a helpless Little Red Ridinghood, which the terrible and bloodthirsty wolf—the aggressive Soviet Union—is preparing to dismember."—Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Soviet leader, at a dinner meeting with President Tito in Yugoslavia. [3:2.]

CORRECTIONS

An article in The Times last Saturday on the alleged looting of a teamsters union welfare fund could be read as implying that the Old Security Life Insurance Company was a defendant in a civil suit brought by the Securities and Exchange Commission. The suit charges that Old Security was used as a front for transferring union premiums to companies controlled by alleged conspirators, but it does not name Old Security as a defendant or ask that its assets be frozen.

• The terms of an offer by the Mobil Corporation for the Irvine Company of California were misstated in late editions of The Times on Saturday. The offer consisted of $164.78 million in cash and $115 million in notes.

By JOHN L. HESS

Jean Gabin, the craggy and sardonic hero-victim of a hundred French films, died yesterday of a heart attack at the American Hospital in Neuilly, on the edge of Paris. He was 72 years old.

An actor since he was 18, Mr. Gabin at his death was as much a star as ever. One theater in Paris was showing a series of his triumphs under the heading "Gabin the Magnificent," and a dinner was scheduled Friday, at which he was to have been promoted to commander of the Legion of Honor. It was canceled when he was admitted to the hospital Saturday, suffering from high blood pressure.

The quintessential Gabin role was that of a loner, an outsider, usually a member of the lower orders, who may flirt with love and happiness but knows they are not for him—like Jean Valjean in "Les Miserables," or Marechal the mechanic-soldier in "Grand Illusion," or Pepe Le Moko, the title role in the film about a Parisian gangster in the casbah of Algiers.

American Debut Delayed

The American debut of "Pepe le Moko" was long delayed to permit Walter Wanger to make a Hollywood version in 1938, called "Algiers" and starring Charles Boyer and Hedy Lamarr. When "Pepe" opened in 1941, Bosley Crowther of The New York Times commented: "It is a raw-edged, frank exposition of a basically evil story, whereas Mr. Wanger's version was a romantic and necessarily cautious retelling of the same."

This may help explain why Mr. Gabin's brief wartime hitch in Hollywood yielded only a couple of soon forgotten roles, while critics have frequently found him perfectly cast in whatever French films he did. An actress once confided to a reporter:

"I thought I was the star in the first picture I made with Jean—until I saw the finished film. There was a scene in which he had no lines at all. He was just standing about while several of us were involved in a furious argument.

"Sitting there in the dark, I found suddenly that I wasn't listening to my words or to the words of the other actors. I wanted desperately to know why this Gabin was so quiet. His whole silence suggested that whatever he was not saying was so much more interesting than what was being shouted by the rest of us."

Tribute From Renoir

Jean Renoir, who directed Mr. Gabin in "Grand Illusion," "The Human Beast" and "French Can-Can," had paid tribute to the extraordinary range of the actor's abilities, and indeed he had been praised for roles ranging from hobo to tycoon. But to the French, he had been essentially working-class, rough, brave, resourceful and pessimistic, and his official biographies emphasize his humble origins.

The former Jean-Alexis Moncorge, the seventh child of two music-hall performers, he was born in northeast Paris not far from Pigalle. He called himself the worst pupil in his class, a brawler, and an adolescent runaway, who worked as a cement mixer and factory laborer.

At the age of 18, however, he obtained a small part in the Folies Bergère, through the intercession of his parents. For eight years, Mr. Gabin played the juvenile song-and-dance man on Paris stages. Then, in 1930, he was offered his first movie role, in "Chacun Sa Chance" (Everybody Gets One Break).

He was seldom idle thereafter, although, in his later years, he would several times declare his determination to retire. His first big hit was as a member of the Spanish Foreign Legion in "La Bandera"; Arthur Koestler has said that he himself was thinking of Jean Gabin when he joined the French Foreign Legion as a refugee from Nazism.

Mr. Gabin's stature as one of the great men of cinema was established in ensuing years by the Renoir films, and by "They Were Five," "Pepe Le Moko," "Les Miserables" and "Port of Shadows," in which Michele Morgan co-starred under the direction of Marcel Carné. Other notable Gabin films included "Daybreak," "The Walls of Malapaga" and "The Room Upstairs," in which Marlene Dietrich was his romantic vis-à-vis.

When war came in 1939, Mr. Gabin joined the French navy as a seaman and served on a minesweeper in the English Channel until the fall of France two years later. Then he signed up with Hollywood, but quit after a year to re-enlist with the Free French as a gunnery instructor and occasional performer.

Afterward, his career entered a pause. His hair had whitened, he had put on weight and he was evidently middle-aged. But the French, if not the English-speaking public, took to him in the 1950's as a solid, aging figure, as the elderly lawyer lover of Brigitte Bardot in "Love Is My Profession," as Inspector Maigret, as a gangster, a derelict or a tycoon, and as the partner-victim of such other favorites as Bourvil, Fernandel, Belmondo and Alain Delon.

Solidly Bourgeois

In private life as on the screen, Mr. Gabin became more solidly bourgeois, cherishing his privacy and expanding his farm in Normandy, where he raised trotting horses. The farm was vandalized in 1964 by peasants who were protesting the buying up of land by wealthy Parisians.

In a recent interview, Mr. Gabin complained about politicians, who he said were "bad actors and dangerous," and tax collectors, who, he said, "take practically everything I own and oblige me to work when I am past 70." He was said to receive one million francs ($200,000) for each film, and made several a year.

He married three times: Gaby Basset in 1925, Jeann Mauchain in 1933 and Christian Fournier in 1949, the present Mrs. Gabin. Surviving also are two sons and two daughters.

A funeral service is to be held tomorrow at Père Lachaise Cemetery in Paris. The body is to be cremated and the ashes scattered at sea. In a memorial tribute, French television scheduled programs of Gabin films.

Berta N. Briggs, Painter And a Writer, Was Head Of Women Artists Group

Berta N. Briggs, painter and writer, who had been active in New York City's cultural activities for many years, died Friday at the De Witt Nursing Home in Manhattan. She was 92 years old and lived at 40 East 96th Street.

Mrs. Briggs was the widow of William H. Briggs, writer, playwright and an editor of Harper & Bros. for 44 years before he died in 1953.

Mrs. Briggs was born in St. Paul and attended the Art Students League in New York, Pratt Institute in Brooklyn and Columbia University.

Before coming to New York in 1910, he organized and supervised the department of handicrafts in St. Paul's public school system, which then had 32 schools, and organized the St. Paul Institute School of Art, where she taught pottery, metal work, leather work, textile design and woodblock printing.

In 1928, Mrs. Briggs began to paint professionally, using as subjects landscapes and compositions, with birds predominant. The birds were drawn from life, mainly at the Bronx Zoo, but they were often fanciful and seemed to be caricatures of people. In addition to five exhibitions of her work in New York City, her paintings were displayed throughout the United States and in London.

Mrs. Briggs's "Charles Willson Peale, Artist and Patriot," was published in 1952. She also wrote "To the Shores of Tripoli," a story of Barbary pirates published in 1955.

She was a former president of the National Association of Women Artists, vice president and chairman of the New York Group of the Society of Women Geographers and a trustee and president of the School Art League of New York.

There are no immediate survivors.

During his 27 years on the bench, the justice presided over a number of important cases, among them condemnation proceedings involving the properties of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company and the redevelopment of Lincoln Center. He was also in charge of the liquidation in 1968 of the affairs of the Intra Bank. Its New York branch had been seized in 1966 by the State Superintendent of Banks when the parent bank in Lebanon temporarily closed its doors.

Since 1968 Justice Hecht had been chairman of the Judiciary Relations Committee, under appointment by the Appellate Division, First Department. The committee is charged with reviewing complaints regarding the qualifications, conduct or performance of any judicial officer in the First Department and with making recommendations to the Appellate Division.

A 1915 graduate of the Phillips Academy in Andover, Mass., he entered Yale but interrupted his studies to serve as a second lieutenant of field artillery with the American Expeditionary Force in France in World War I. The idea of using private detectives was hatched by Sidney Baumgarten, a mayoral assistant and director of the Midtown Enforcement Project, a Federally financed group that deals with midtown problems in New York.

Last spring Robert M. Morgenthau, the Manhattan District Attorney, assured Mr. Baumgarten that his office would not prosecute a private investigator for engaging in illegal sexual acts if he acted "within the scope of his duties in an effort properly to enforce the law."

"It is not illegal, but I do not think it is a desirable activity," Mr. Morgenthau said yesterday.

"What's wrong with it?" asked Mr. Baumgarten. "How else do you approach prostitution?"

He said a similar approach had been used by the Commodore Hotel a couple of years ago when it wished to evict Relaxation Plus, a popular massage parlor. Once that eviction was upheld in court, Mr. Baumgarten said, he decided to adopt the technique.

Several other efforts to curb the spread of massage parlors have failed.

Under state law, prostitution is illegal, but it is extremely difficult to prosecute because of the difficulty in finding proof of "solicitation."

Under a New York Police Department policy, officers cannot disrobe while on duty. Knowing of this policy, prostitutes are ordinarily unwilling to talk about sex until the patron has undressed.

The private investigators, Mr. Baumgarten says, "act like law-enforcement agents."

Parlor Shut as Nuisance

Hidden Desire's landlord, the Hamilton Appliance Service Corporation, asked Mr. Baumgarten how to evict the establishment, and he suggested using private investigators.

Once the city had obtained the investigators' affidavits, it moved in State Supreme Court to have the massage parlor closed as a nuisance under a section of the Public Health Law. A temporary injunction was granted last Tuesday by Justice Thomas Hughes. The establishment at East 59th Street and Third Avenue, has been closed since then.

"If we don't use this route, there will be no way to deal with 75 percent of prostitution places in the city, even with a zoning law," Mr. Baumgarten said. Last week the Beame administration disclosed a proposal that would strictly limit the number of massage parlors and other "adult-oriented" establishments.

"You still need the proof," Mr. Baumgarten said, adding that the use of private detectives to buy sex was not dissimilar from law-enforcement agencies' employment of informants to buy drugs.

But several law-enforcement officials and lawyers who are active in civil-liberties causes said yesterday tha the prostitution problem was not serious enough to justify the hiring of a private citizen to commit a crime.

MEDICAID'S LAB FEES BEING CUT UP TO HALF

Move by New York City Agency Slated to Trim Reimbursement Costs by $3 Million a Year

By PRANAY GUPTE

Medicaid reimbursement fees for the most frequently ordered laboratory tests will be reduced by up to one-half, thereby saving the program an estimated total of $3 million a year, New York City's Medicaid Administration announced yesterday.

The city's action is a part of an economy move designed to trim at least $10 million from New York's annual $1.9 billion in Medicaid expenditures, according to Dr. Martin Paris, the city's associate commissioner of health.

But the announcement yesterday, made jointly by Dr. Paris and by Forest Williams, director of medical assistance in the city's Department of Social Services, drew bitter criticism from representatives of the 250 laboratories in the city that participate in Medicaid.

"We are initiating a lawsuit against the city concerning these new rates," said Irvin R. Karasik, a lawyer who represents several small and medium-sized laboratories. "This is a most serious matter because our survival is at stake."

Mr. Karasik said that the new fee schedule would be, in effect, discriminatory toward the smaller laboratories because they would be much less able to absorb the cutbacks than some of the bigger laboratories, such as Metpath Inc., of Hackensack, N.J.

His view was endorsed yesterday by Metpath's president, Robert Burns, who acknowledged in an inteview that the new fees could indeed be absorbed better by larger concerns such as his.

But the position of the laboratory representatives did not appear to surprise Dr. Paris.

"We fully expect to be sued a lot on this," he said. "But the labs' cost of producing services has decreased immensely because of new and better techniques, and lately they were getting an unreasonable built-in profit margin."

$10 Million Paid in Year

Dr. Paris said that the city's Medicaid program had paid $10 million last year to the laboratories in fees, of which about 75 percent went to 16 large laboratories.

"So you see tht smaller labs are frozen out of Medicaid anyway," he said, adding that it was the administration's contention that a substantial part of the lab fees was funneled into kickbacks by the labs themselves.

Responding to Mr. Karasik's charge that the new rate reductions—which would affect such services as blood tests—would be discriminatory to the small labs, Dr. Paris replied: "Do we have an obligation to subsidize the smaller labs? We are not going to subsidize inefficient labs."

But Dr. Paris also sought to stress in a telephone interview from his office at 330 West 34th Street that the new rate reductions would also affect the larger laboratories because the cutbacks concerned the most commonly ordered tests —such as blood and urine analyses—that were done by the labs through automation.

Dr. Paris noted that in a telephone survey conducted by Medicaid officials, the administration had found a discrepancy of 500 to 800 percent in the rates of tests available to individuals in labs and the rates charged to Medicaid.

"There unquestionably were kickbacks here," Dr. Paris said, stressing that the city's observations concerning alleged illegalities by laboratories paralleled those contained in a report earlier this year by a special United States Senate subcommittee. That report, prepared by the staff of Senator Frank E. Moss, Democrat of Utah, alleged that it was a widespread practice among laboratories to share their "extraordinary" profits with Medicaid physicians in the form of kickbacks.

Officer Fatally Shot as Comrade Fights With Suspect

By ROY R. SILVER
Special to The New York Times

MINEOLA, L.I., Nov. 15—A Nassau County police officer was shot and killed last night when another policeman's service revolver discharged accidentally in a struggle with an 18-year-old suspect seized after a chase in a stolen car, the Nassau County police said today.

The county police officer who was killed was George R. Kempen, 38 years old, of North Merrick, the father of an 11-year-old son. He was shot at 9:55 P.M. when the youth, Christopher J. Doran, a high school senior from Massapequa Park, allegedly tried to wrest the gun away from Richard Kash, a Long Island State Parkway police officer.

The youth was charged in First District Court today with second-degree murder, reckless endangerment and criminal mischief, all felonies. He was held without bail on the charges for a hearing tomorrow.

George R. Kempen

Christopher J. Doran

Barry Grennan, an assistant Nassau County district attorney, said he would present the case to the grand jury and would also include misdemeanor charges of criminal mischief, resisting arrest, possession of a controlled substance and unauthorized use of a motor vehicle.

Car Listed as Stolen

According to Frank Klecak, the Nassau County Chief of Detectives, at about 9:30 last night, two Long Island State Parkway police officers checked on a car that was moving eastbound with its tail lights out on the Southern State Parkway near Baldwin.

When the police officers, Mr. Kash and Ralph Porcelli, were told that the car had been stolen, they attempted to stop it, but it speeded up and the officers gave chase, Chief Klecak said.

The high-speed pursuit eventually involved four Long Island State Parkway police cars and three Nassau police cars, and ended on Meadowbrook Road in North Merrick, the street on which Officer Kempen lived.

The Parkway police officers said that during the chase they had seen the driver lean forward as if reaching under the seat. They feared that the suspect might have a weapon and broadcast that he might be armed. During the three-mile chase, the police said, the driver of the car tried three times to force the police cars off the road and also struck one of the cars.

When the suspect was forced to pull over on Meadowbrook Road, Officer Kash, who is 32 years old, approached the driver with his gun drawn and told him to come out with his hands in the air, the police said.

Door Kicked Shut

Mr. Doran started to get out of the car, the police said, but because his hands had not been in the air, the policeman kicked the door shut and again told him to come out with his hands up.

The youth then lunged at Officer Kash, who was holding his gun in both hands, and started to struggle with him, the police said. The gun went off, and the bullet struck Officer Kempen, who had just arrived at the scene and was about 25 feet away. The youth was placed in custody and Officer Kempen was rushed to the Nassau County Medical Center, where he died at 10:20 P.M. in the emergency room.

The police said they had found a small quantity of marijuana in the car.

The fatal shot that killed the police officer, who had been on the force for 15 years, struck him near the left shoulder and the slug traveled downward and hit an artery leading to the aorta.

During the investigation that followed the shooting, Officer Kash broke down and cried.

"I coudn't help it. I couldn't help it," he told Roland Russell, president of the Parkway Police Benevolent Association. "I was trying to restrain this guy and the gun went off."

Grant to Port Authority

The Port Authority of New York and New Jersey has received a Federal grant of $150,000 to continue its Staggered Work Hours program in midtown and lower Manhattan and in Newark, Roger H. Gilman, assistant director of the authority, announced.

The six-year-old program claims to have convinced more than 400 corporations to change the work schedules of some 220,000 employees away from the standard 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. pattern, thereby relieving rush-hour congestion on mass transit facilities. Mr. Gilman also announced that John T. Fey, chairman of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, has been appointed chairman of the program in the midtown area.

Uplift Ahead for 14th St.-Union Square Area

By EMANUEL PERLMUTTER

A three-year plan to revitalize and beautify the 14th Street-Union Square area through private contributions and government cooperation was announced yesterday by a combination of business and community groups.

The aim is to raise $1.5 million to improve the sprawling Union Square subway station, restore and beautify Union Square Park and the streets around it and to make the area more attractive and desirable for business, residents and visitors.

Details were disclosed at a news conference held by the newly formed 14th Street-Union Square Area Project in Luchow's Restaurant, 110 East 14th Street. Co-chairmen of the project are Charles F. Luce, board chairman of Consolidated Edison, and Dr. John R. Everett, president of the new School for Social Research.

Mr. Luce said that Con Edison, whose headquarters is in the area, had pledged to contribute $50,000 in each of the three years to help bring the plans to fruition.

Shopping Mall Planned

Other organizations pledging support include the Amalgamated Bank, the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, Citibank, the Guardian Life Insurance Company, Helmsley-Spear Inc., Mays Department Stores, the New School for Social esearch, the New York Telephone Company, United Mutual Savings Bank and the Samuel Klein Estate. Also involved are the 14th Street Association and Community Boards 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6.

Envisaged in the subway improvements are use of the mezzanine level as a shopping mall, elimination of redundant crossover corridors among BMT, IRT and IND lines and the installation of new signs and improved lighting.

For Union Square Park, the plan is to trim hedges, relocate benches, prune trees, reseed plants, install new trash containers, repair and paint benches, paint railings and run a water line into the park for cleaning and botanical use. In addition to the physical and botanical changes, the sponsors will seek to have a six-month program of weekly noon concerts.

The area to be generally covered in the revitalization project runs from 13th to 15th Street between Second and Seventh Avenues.

Efforts will be made to deal with the difficult problems of drug peddling and prostitution on 14th Street.

Present at yesterday's announcement and pledging government support were David L. Yunich, chairman of the Metropolitan Transit Authority; Borough President Percy E. Sutton of Manhattan, Parks Commissioner Martin Lang; Sanitation Commissioner Anthony Vacarello; Victor Marrero, chairman of the City Planning Commission, and other officials.

Fashion Casts Its Eye on a Gossamer Spring

By BERNADINE MORRIS

Spring clothes aren't the sort that will strike terror in the hearts of conservatives. The ones that have been parading down the runways of Seventh Avenue in the last two weeks don't play any tricks with hemlines or offer an new, startling types of exposure. When designers want clothes to look provocative, they tend to open up a few buttons of a shirt or make a neckline plunge. These days, that's not enough to make anybody stare.

There are changes under way that are subtly remaking the image of fashion. They involve banishing any construction—lining, interfacing, stiffening—that will interfere with the flow of fabric.

Of course, the better the fabric, the more effective the concept. Which has led designers on a worldwide search for gossamer-weight wools, silks and even cottons, which have a flow worth watching.

The idea is familiar enough for evening, where designers have let jersey and chiffon do their number for quite a few seasons. But a jacket that is light enough to be airborne? A coat of cloud-like mohair that drifts behind like the wake of a ship when the wearer moves briskly?

That's the message of the spring collections, and it's formulated most beautifully for spring by John Anthony. His clothes are most casual in cut, most luxurious to the touch. He carries separates to a high art.

Skirts mostly wrap and have a series of flat pleats in front. Silk shirts repeat the pleats and have a little string tie under the collar. Coats and sweaters of mohair serve as wraps.

The formula works so well, it adapts for evening with just a few changes. Substitute satin pants for the gabardine skirt. Add a silk coat, striped and shaped like a bathobe, to a long skirt. Provide some unobtrusively decorative details such as rows of fine-stitched tucks or a thin line of fagoting.

The result is an evening outfit that looks fresh, contemporary and at the head of the fashion class.

Bill Blass is no slouch when it comes to assembling a fashion curriculum that is in tune with the times. His spring clothes are a trifle more tailored than the ones Mr. Anthony devised, and he does provide traditional-looking suit or reefer coat if that's what your heart desires.

But then there are sweater jackets, hand knit by Constance Montgomery, to toss over a crepe de chine dress. And such a roomy concoction as a crepe de chine tunic over a gray flannel skirt, topped by a white mohair coat that looks as if it were made of spun sugar.

Evening is devoted to mists of chiffon, sometimes layered (pink over peach over toast), or crepe de chine, sometimes tailored into a shirt, pants and jacket, and sometimes strapless.

Mary McFadden is a special talent in the fashion field, following her own rather exotic muse. Her aim is clothes that form a thin shell for the body, allowing the body to move around inside. Very subtle, that concept. But not too subtle: In the four years she's been in business, Miss MacFadden's popularity has been growing by leaps and

In an art-filled showroom just west of Seventh Avenue, which she has just decorated with a 30-foot-long wall painting by Allen Shields, carved wooden birds that guard graves in Madagascar and stone sculptures from Rhodesia, she showed her largest collection of clothes to date.

The 130 styles included her famous pleated dresses, some new embroidered ones, mohair coats laced in gold, apron dresses and "separates," which are tops and bottoms in different prints that go together in an interesting manner.

Miss McFadden's clothes aspire to art, bearing echoes of, say, color field painting, or Celtic symbols. But these can also be enjoyed in their own right as fashions with a special mood.

Cathy Hardwick is on another wave length: young and kicky. Her clothes are not, this time, for serious occasions. They're playful things in terry cloth for the beach and environs—some of them are very short—or they're as clean as freshly laundered sheets that have been dried on a the sun instead of in a machine.

One of the fun things: a top tha more than a ruffle and a matchin on an elastic band, so it can be pu under the bra, making it knee-len drawn down to the waist, making it The fabric is red terry cloth.

Finally came the moment the women had been waiting for. Roberto Bezgono, a makeup man from Rome, would do a makeup on Toni Ausnit, a young woman from the audience.

Mr. Bezgono had quite a bagful of tricks. He put foundation on with a sponge and under-eye coverup stick with a cotton swab. He demonstrated how to use an eyelash curler properly. (Insert the lashes, press, release and press again.)

The lesson over, everybody rushed down to the Rubinstein counter to pick up samples of Existence super-rich cream. Mrs. Newhouse bought a moisturizer. Mrs. Phipps promised to come back and discuss the items on her chart.

The New Beaujolais: Some New Highs

PARIS, Nov. 15 (UPI)—The new beaujolais wine went on sale today with both higher alcoholic content and higher prices.

All around Paris, lovers of what was known in past centuries as the poor folks' wine gathered at bars under signs proclaiming "Le Nouveau Beaujolais Est Arrivé" (The New Beaujolai Has Arrived.")

The opening of the wine barrels actually was a worldwide event. Trucks and airplanes loaded with wine left Villefranche-sur-Saône in the Beaujolais country promptly at midnight on the legal Nov. 15 selling date.

The happy news for Parisians was that last summer's drought created an unusual amount of sugar in the gamay noir grapes. The fermented sugar brought the highest legal amount of alcohol possible to the new wine, 13 percent. Beaujolais usually is 11 percent alcohol.

"To find so much alcohol you have to go back to 1947," said Raymond Mathelin, a wine grower, at Chatillon in the Beaujolais region.

Heavy sunshine brought in a wine crop of 100 million bottles, as against 65 million in 1975. But Parisians crowding into cafes asked in dismay why it was selling for 50 percent more than last year, or up to $2.75 a bottle.

Tasters crowding one wine shop vied for metaphors in their descriptions of the 1976 vintage.

"It's a bit stunned as it's just been bottled, but it has a good nose," one connoisseur said.

"It has a solid framework like a hockey player," another commented.

Beaujolais is a burgundy wine, since the Beaujolais region stretches from Macon to Lyon in the Bourgogne. Growers of ordinary beaujolais (as opposed to more expensive beaujolais such as Brouilly) set aside the wine of their September harvest that tastes good "young" without waiting for it to age. That wine, called "primeur," now is known around the world as new beaujolais.

There's a great getaway season ahead.

Yunevich Ends 45-Year Coaching Career

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.

Alex Yunevich, a successful coach, who decided 45 years ago that he preferred the small-college football atmosphere to the high-pressure world of major college football, retired yesterday after 36 seasons as the head football coach at Alfred University in upstate New York. No other currently active football coach has been at one college as long as the 67-year-old Yunevich, who began at Alfred in 1937.

College Sports Notes

Yunevich, a former Purdue fullback who was graduated from that Big Ten university in 1932, started his coaching career as an assistant at Purdue. After one year he took a job as an assistant at Lehigh. In 1934 he became the head football coach at Central Michigan, where he remained for three seasons before settling down at Alfred.

He served in the Navy from 1942 through 1945, during which time Alfred dropped varsity football to await the return of its head coach.

Alfred won 177 games under Yunevich, lost 85 and tied 12 and posted six undefeated seasons. His 1971 team won the Lambert Bowl as the East's leading Division III team. Following that undefeated season, Yunevich won the Stan Lomax-Irving T. Marsh Trophy as the outstanding Eastern small college coach.

During his early years in coaching, Yunevich turned down a number of offers from major colleges. He made it clear that despite tempting money offers he wanted to coach "where it is fun."

Yunevich was not at Alfred, N. Y., yesterday when Dr. M. Richard Rose, the school's president, announced the coach's retirement. The coach was vacationing in Florida with his wife, Ann. Yunevich will finish his coaching career this spring as Alfred's golf coach.

Maybe it was the recruiting that turned Yunevich away from major college coaching. He would not have done well in a major college recruiting on an Alfred budget. For 1976, Yunevich turned in a recruiting expense account of $55.60.

While Yunevich's retirement was being announced, another slightly younger coach emphasized that he wanted very much to be coaching when he is 67. Paul (Bear) Bryant, the 64-year-old coach at Alabama, said in Birmingham that he wanted to be at Alabama when the Crimson Tide is scheduled to meet Notre Dame again in 1980. Alabama lost to the Irish last Saturday, 21-18. This was Notre Dame's third victory over Alabama, which has not beaten Notre Dame. Bryant coached Alabama in each of these defeats.

Speaking at a news conference, Bryant said, "How many 67-year-old coaches do you know who are still around and winning?" Since no one mentioned Yunevich, Bryant continued: "I hope I'm around then. I'm not near the coach I used to be and there are a lot of young coaches around who are doing well. Anybody I can find who can win more games than we can, I'll get him. But right now, looking out over the horizon, I don't see anybody."

C. W. Post, which will meet Towson State of Maryland in the first round of the National Collegiate Athletic Association Division III playoffs, Saturday, was named winner of the Lambert Bowl yesterday. Coach Dom Anile will accept the award for the second time at the Lambert awards luncheon in the Roosevelt Hotel, Dec. 9. Post, which won the bowl in 1973, posted an 8-2 won-lost record this season, losing its final regular-season game to Lehigh last Saturday, 17-10.

Widener, which had an 8-1 record, finished second in the voting 10 ½ points behind Post with Kings Point third, a half point back of Widener. Post had 68 ½ points, with five and a half of a possible seven first-place votes. Kings Point, which had an 8-1 mark but lost to Post, had the other one and a half first-place votes.

Post and Towson State will meet at noon on Post's field in Brookville, L.I.

Albright, which finished sixth in the Lambert Bowl voting, will play St. Lawrence in another N.C.A.A. Division III first-round playoff game, Saturday at St. Lawrence. The Larries were fourth in the Lambert Bowl vote with Franklin and Marshall fifth. Both St. Lawrence and Albright posted an 8-1 regular-season mark.

Cozza Steps Down as Yale Coach; Remains as Elis' Athletic Directo[r]

Special to The New York Times

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 15—Carmen Cozza, the most successful football coach in Yale University history, announced tonight that he was stepping down to devote full time to his duties as athletic director. He made the announcement at the team banquet.

Cozza, 46 years old, compiled a 77-30-1 won-lost-tied record in 12 seasons as Yale's head coach, leading the Elis to five Ivy League championships. Yale, which shared the crown with Brown this year, also had three second-place finishes under Cozza.

"When I was asked to take the athletic directorship last June, it was with the understanding that I give up my coaching duties at the end of the season," said Cozza. "The Yale Corporation [Board of Trustees] saw no reason to alter that decision."

A native of Parma, Ohio, Cozza is a graduate of Miami University in Oxford, Ohio. He came to Yale as an assistant in 1963 and was named head coach in 1965. He has been chosen New England coach of the year three times.

A committee will be formed to begin the search for Cozza's successor.

Divisional Restructuring Urged

CHICAGO, Nov. 15 (AP)—Rules changes that would reduce Division I membership from 247 institutions to approximately 150 where football is the major sport were discussed here today at a Division I meeting of the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

The plan, which will be submitted to the N.C.A.A. convention in M[iami] Beach in January, would drop sch[ools] with lesser football programs from [Di]vision I, the association's most po[wer]ful grouping. But some institu[tions] would be able to compete in Divi[sion] I in certain sports and then cha[nnel] other programs into either Divisi[on II] or Division III, depending on [the] schools' respective strengths.

"We left feeling quite good in r[egard] to the proposal, and we will pr[esent] it to the national convention," sa[id] Neils Thompson, faculty represent[ative] from the University of Texas and [chair]man of the meeting.

The N.C.A.A. president, Joh[n] Fuzak, faculty representative [of] Michigan State, also was present [at the] meeting, attended by more tha[n ...] representatives from Division I u[niver]sities and allied conferences.

"The plan was reviewed in co[nsid]erable detail," said Thompson. [".. .] members have had several wee[ks to] study it, and we had a healthy di[scus]sion."

Under the present program, som[e Di]vision I members are not on a com[peti]tive level in all sports, but, for [fear] of losing their Division I status, [they] are forced to schedule certain s[ports] in a way that proves to be a bu[rden.] For example, a school that wan[ts to] play Division I basketball must [keep] all its programs in Division I, alth[ough] its football program may be more [suit]ed to the level of II or III.

Their Lead at Stake As the Cowboys Play

IRVING, Tex., Nov. 15 (AP)—The Dallas Cowboys, shooting for their best start ever in the National Football League and battling to keep ahead of the second-place St. Louis Cardinals in the National Conference's Eastern Division, took on the Buffalo Bills at Texas Stadium tonight.

The Cowboys led, 14-7, midway in the third quarter.

Roger Staubach, who had missed some practices while suffering from influenza, was, nonetheless, the starting quarterback for the Cowboys, who had never won nine of their first 10 games since they entered the league in 1960. Entering tonight's game, Dallas was 8-1, and the Cards were 8-2 after yesterday's 30-28 victory over Los Angeles.

Jakowenko Misses Field Goal

The Bills, led by O.J. Simpson, were 2-7, had dropped five games in a row, their longest losing streak since 1972, and had lost their last three Monday night appearances.

The temperature was hovering around the freezing mark at kickoff time.

The game was scoreless at the end of the first period.

Buffalo took the opening kickoff and moved from its 31-yard line to the Dallas 26, with Simpson running for short gains and Gary Marangi completing passes of 14 and 9 yards to Bob Chandler and 10 yards to Simpson. But a 42-yard field-goal attempt by George Jakowenko was wide to the right.

This kick was the closest thing to a score either team could manage. The Cowboys never got out of their own territory, as Staubach failed to connect on his first four passes.

But then Dallas scored first, in the second quarter, on a 2-yard run by Preston Pearson.

A punt fumbled by the Cowboys' Butch Johnson at his 41 minutes later allowed the Bills to tie the game at 7-7. Three plays later Marangi hit Reuben Gant with a 27-yard touchdown pass.

With the first half almost over, Buffalo missed an excellent chance to go in front when Marangi, on third and inches from his 35, barely missed connecting with Chandler, who had broken behind the Cowboys' defense and would have scored easily if he had held the ball.

Buffalo then punted, and, with only 24 seconds left, it seemed the half would end in a tie.

But Staubach hit Drew Pearson across the middle on a 40-yarder that carried to the Buffalo 21. On the following play, the Dallas quarterback floated a pass over the head of Doug Jones, safety, and Drew Pearson caught it 4 yards deep in the end zone for the score.

Harvard and Alitz of Army Capture Titles in IC4A Cross-Country Run

By NEIL AMDUR

It took more time to decide the team champion at the IC4A cross-country meet yesterday than it did for Curt Alitz of Army to win the individual title. The 21-year-old Cadet, the runner-up last year, covered the five-mile course at Van Cortlandt Park in 23 minutes 58.1 seconds and finished 25 yards ahead of John Flora of Northeastern in the University Division.

It took almost 30 minutes, however, to decide the winner in the closest team finish in recent years. Even after Harvard was declared the surprising winner over Villanova by only 3 points, several other bizarre developments fueled otherwise chilly afternoon proceedings.

First, discrepancies occurred between the number of competitors who were counted at the three-mile mark (181) and the number who finished the race (185). Did four athletes hide out somewhere on the course for a portion of the race, perhaps behind a rock or along the cow path, and then rejoin the field? Or were the discrepancies a clerical error in the heat of combat?

No one will ever know whether this situation could have altered the outcome of the team competition. But a coin toss earlier in the week unquestionably affected Villanova's chances for another crown.

The coin toss was to decide whether Don Paige, a sophomore, or Phil (Tiny) Kane, a senior, would become the seventh Wildcat entry. Kane, a 4:01[8] miler, called heads; the coin came up tails. Paige, who also has run a 4:01 mile, finished 50th yesterday in 25:34. An angry Kane won the junior varsity section in 25:06, a time that would have tied him for 22d place in the university division and given Villanova the team title.

Winner Starts Bid Early

"We shouldn't have flipped a coin," Kane said afterward. "The coaches should have made a decision. I thought I deserved the chance because I was a senior and I had a better personal best. I wasn't going to run after I lost the coin flip. Then I decided to show them they made a mistake."

Villanova, trying to regain a crown in a sports it once dominated, also lost potential points when Steve Crooke, a junior, failed to finish, and Ed Takacs, an IC4A half-mile champion, was overtaken by four runners in the final 15 yards.

"It was a tough race all the way," said the 6-foot-2-inch, 165-pound cadet, who also swam competitively for Army last year but intends to concentrate on track and field in the distance events. "I started breaking it right after three miles. I knew if they were close with 300 yards left, I'd be in trouble, because I have a poor kick."

The College Division team title was taken by Lehigh, in another closely contested competition with Fairleigh Dickinson, 94 points to 108. Frank Richardson of Massachusetts Institute of Technology was the individual winner in 25:05.8.

It was Harvard's first team title in 45 years, and Jeff Campbell, who finished fifth, led the spirited squad in a series of cheers when the official result finally was announced.

The first five finishers count in team scoring. Four Harvard runners were among the first 20, but the Crimson had to sweat it out until 91st place before their fifth point-scorer reached the finish.

"We've had some seconds and thirds in the team competition over the years," said Coach Bill McCurdy, who

O. J. Simpson being stopped by Cowboys' Benny Barnes in first-quarter action

Barnes to Be Arrested For Violating Probation

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 15 (AP)—A warrant was issued today for the arrest of Marvin Barnes, the suspended Detroit Piston basketball star, for allegedly violating the terms of a probationary sentence. Barnes, charged two years ago with assaulting a former Providence College teammate with a tire iron, was placed on three years probation and received a one-year suspended prison sentence.

The alleged probation violation happened on Oct. 9 when Barnes was charged with having an unloaded handgun in his luggage when it was checked at a Romulus, Mich., airport. The Pistons have suspended Barnes for missing practice sessions and other violations. He also faces criminal charges in connection with the handgun incident.

...iants Not Sure Morton Will Be Ready for Broncos

By MICHAEL KATZ
Special to The New York Times

ASANTVILLE, N.Y., Nov. 15—McVay, coach of the happiest 1-9 in football, began preparations to get the Giants far enough back to play in Denver's Mile High ...m this Sunday.

...must be like the feeling World ...I veterans describe after a bat... McVay said of the euphoria fol... the Giants' first victory this sea... 12-9 decision over their bitterest ... the Washington Redskins, yes...

...Vay can't be sure of his battle ... until he finds out if his No. 1 ...erback, Craig Morton, will be able ...e the Broncos. Morton was side... yesterday with an inflamed right ... that must have felt better and better the longer Norm Snead played quarterback.

Snead was the quarterback of record for the Giants' first victory, but his own record was not the cause of that victory: only three completions in 14 passes for 26 yards, two interceptions and two other passes that were dropped by Harold McLinton, the Washington middle linebacker. The 37-year-old Snead was so ineffective that Morton, whose elbow was drained of fluid just before the game, began warming up in the second period.

"We could've put him in," said McVay, "but we felt if we did we might last a series, maybe two series, and then he'd be lost again for a long, long time if he got antoher shot on the arm.

"He was very anxious to play, as you can imagine."

Morton, whom Giants Stadium fans seemed to single out as the cause of the team's demise, told Snead last week how eager he was to play against the Redskins.

"Craig said, 'I'm just sick that I'm hurt because I feel we're going to beat this team,'" Snead said.

"I feel great about winning, though," Morton said.

Jack Gregory, the defensive captain, said the best thing of all was that the players "never gave up" and neither did the fans. "I've been here five years," said the defensive end, "and people kept coming up to me saying they were die-hard Giant fans. You've got to be die-hard to stay with us that long."

The victory, the first by the Giants against the Redskins in 12 games and their first against a team coached by George Allen in 15, was McVay's first in the National Football League. It could be a very important one for him.

Andy Robustelli, the director of operations, acknowledged that beating the Redskins could make McVay's tenure here a little longer.

"We're not hoping to look for someone else," Robustelli said.

Defense Has Improved

McVay replaced Bill Arnsparger as coach after the seventh game "not strictly" on an interim basis. In other words, if the 45-year-old coach turns the team around, he could be back next season.

One victory does not turn a season around, but in the three games

Baron Long's Linden Tree Caper

...N FRANCISCO, Nov. 14—Baron Long was a cheerful ...e whose name is still a legend up and down the Pacific ... He was a professional gambler with money, imagina... ...nd a soaring talent for mischief. He loved opera deeply, ...othing by Verdi or Bizet or Wagner could fill his breast ... such exultation as the cries of bookmakers whom he ...lipped for a bundle. He operated the famous U.S. Grant ...n San Diego, raced a string of horses and had a piece ...e old Tia Juana track across the Mexican border. After Tia Juana was replaced by Agua Caliente, he controlled that track. Almost 45 years have passed since he brought off the Linden Tree caper but horseplayers in these parts remember it vividly. Not only horseplayers in these parts, for Phil Bieber lives ...e East and he remembers. This is how Phil and his ...er, Isador, heard it from Baron Long himself sitting in ...S. Grant.

Sports of ...e Times

...ong's friend, George Drumheller, told him that his ...ster, Linden Tree, acted like a top horse. Certainly ... wasn't another 2-year-old south of the border that ... warm him up. He was making his first start at Cali... in a two-furlong race for maidens on Jan. 7, 1932. ...e short races for 2-year-olds in January were always ...d as the first race of the day.

...uilding up the mutuel price on a horse required ingenu... ...nd daring. It worked best on the first race on the ...am, when the crowd was small and the play light. ... a few thousand dollars, correctly bet, could work won... ... with the odds.

...ong learned that he and Drumheller were by no means ...nly ones aware of Linden Tree's ability. The horse was ...o be a short-priced favorite. Long instructed his trainer ...ter two of his 2-year-olds, Sir Val and Don Alonzo, in ...ace. Then he got hold of Harry Fink, a former New ... bookmaker who owned horses, gambled on a large ... and was, above all, an expert at laying bets off.

Emergency!

...ong told Fink to bet $15,000 for him on Linden Tree ...spread it in small amounts among bookies all over the ...ry. Fink warned him that when the race train from ...ngeles and San Diego arrived with the seasoned pro... ...mals, they would bet Linden Tree down to 1-to-10.

...eave those details to me,' Long said. 'Just do as I ask.' ...nsing what was in the wind, Harry said: 'When the ... wire shows the price going up on Linden Tree, the ...s will start laying the bets off at the track. Then what ...ns?'

...t's my money and my worry,' Long said. 'Just take ... of your end.'

...n the morning of the race, the first train from Los ...les arrived in San Diego well loaded and picked up ...est of the Caliente regulars. As it pulled out of the station, a shriek was heard from a stout woman of middle age: 'Stop the train! Please stop! My husband is dying! Get a doctor quick!'

"Somebody yanked the emergency cord and the train stopped. Seeing a man collapsed on the woman's lap, the conductor ran through the cars calling for a doctor. 'Has anyone some whisky or brandy?' the woman pleaded. A man handed her a flask. She tilted her head back and took a deep draft. 'Old Taylor,' she said. 'Thanks,' she said, and handed back the flask. The sick man grunted.

"The conductor arrived with a doctor who made a quick examination and said he would call an ambulance. 'Don't touch or move the patient,' he called over his shoulder as he hurried off.

"The ambulance arrived. Attendants placed the man on a stretcher. The wife followed them off the train. The ambulance drove to the service entrance of Baron Long's U.S. Grant Hotel. The doctor was waiting there. 'Did all go O.K. after I left?' he asked. 'Fine,' said Maize, the chambermaid, alighting from the ambulance. Jeb, a kitchen helper, followed her, fully recovered from his heart attack. Laughing, they entered the hotel while the 'doctor' took off for his pharmacy nearby.

Music, Maestro, Please

"Meanwhile at the tracks, Long's entry opened at 20-to-1 and Linden Tree at 7-to-10. Long bet $10,000 on the entry and the price on those two tumbled to 2-to-1. In those days before the electric totalizator, odds were computed manually and changes marked by hand on large display cards. Baron had a little villain named Gionomni in charge of this department and had told him to be in no hurry displaying changes on Linden Tree. So the next price shown on the horse was only 4-to-5. At that price, books around the country held their bets.

"The race started just as the first trainload of bettors arrived. The field was well bunched except for Linden Tree. With George Woolf in the saddle, that one broke six lengths on top and won as he pleased. After the result was declared official, Linden Tree's mutuel was posted: $21.40 win, $2.60 place, $2.20 show.

"The books weren't worried, for it seemed obvious that this was a wire service error that would soon be corrected. No correction came. The Racing Form waited two days before publishing the price.

"An investigation was made and the stewards ruled Baron Long off his own track. A week later, though, the ruling was rescinded with the statement that 'we cannot punish a man for betting on his own horses.'

"The screams of the bookmakers were anguished and real. Not even the Metropolitan's Pagliacci with the great Enrico Caruso could equal Agua Caliente's production of Linden Tree starring Baron Long in a countrywide chorus of bookmakers weeping in the background."

Jets' Defense Brings Back The Shutout

By GERALD ESKENAZI
Special to The New York Times

HEMPSTEAD, L.I., Nov. 15—The defense rested today.

Some, like Richard Neal and Phil Wise, played cards and relived yesterday's 34-0 victory over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers—the Jets' second shutout in their history.

"I figured," said Wise, "that sometime in my career I'd get a shutout. Did you ever get one, Richard?"

"No, never," said Neal. "I was with New Orleans before I came here."

The shutout was the first for the Jets at Shea Stadium. Their other one was at the Polo Grounds against Kansas City in 1963. Since then, 180 games had elapsed.

It is hard to get a shutout, although the odds shrink if you play Tampa Bay, an expansion team that has yet to win a game in the National ootball League. The shutout was only the 17th in 140 league games this season, but the Buccaneers have suffered four of them.

Michaels the Mastermind

The only player in both Jet shutouts was Winston Hill. But he is a member of the offense. The last shutout also was masterminded by Walt Michaels, then, as now, the club's defensive coordinator.

"We didn't have that title then," said Michaels. "In 1963, I was the only assistant coach on the defense."

Luck plays the largest role, perhaps, in a shutout. It also helps to get a big early lead, thus forcing the other team to forsake the field goal and attempt to make the big play.

"For a change, we were in a choice position," explained Neal. "The New York Jets usually don't get the chance to know what the other team is going to do. But this was one of the few times we knew what the other team was going to try. In other games we would play against teams that had the Nearly on Time, right, with Jacinto Vasquez up, beating Ruthie's Native in the eighth race at Aqueduct yesterday. Upper Nile was third.

Nearly on Time, $21.80, Wins Nashua Stakes at Aqueduct

By MICHAEL STRAUSS

Five 2-year-old colts with one major goal provided the theme of yesterday's $36,675 Nashua Stakes at Aqueduct. The big incentive? To register a first stakes victory.

At the Race Tracks

The successful one proved to be Mrs. Moody Jolley's $21.80-for-$2 Nearly on Time. The gray son of Pollux traveled the mile in 1:35 3/5 to defeat Ruth A. Perlmutter's Ruthie's Native for the winner's purse of $22,005 by a nose.

To gain the triumph, Nearly on Time had to struggle with Ruthie's Native head to head, the length of the stretch. About 70 yards from home, the Jolley color-bearer poked his nose in front of his rival's and managed to keep it there.

"My colt certainly showed lots of heart," Jacinto Vasquez said after having guided Nearly on Time to the colt's third career victory, in nine starts. "We were passed by Ruthie's Native just before the eighth pole, but my horse refused to quit."

Vasquez attributed his colt's success partly to a change in whip handling as the two horses neared the wire.

"I had hit Nearly on Time twice with the right hand with about a quarter of a mile to go," he said. "When we were passed, I switched the whip to my left hand and worked on that side. It was then that my horse took off again."

Ron Turcotte, who rode the $2.10-to-$1 Ruthie's Native, also turned in a fine effort. Having kept his charge second while Nearly on Time was making all the pace down the backstretch, Turcotte made his bid entering the stretch.

"My colt turned in a fine job," said Turcotte. "He showed lots of speed. Even when we were passed, he kept right on running."

The second-place edge of Ruthie's Native was 1½ lengths over the Cragwood Stable's favored Upper Nile. The even-money choice trailed his four rivals by almost seven lengths in the backstretch.

Sigmund Sommer's Catalan and Mrs. Philip Hofmann's Gallant Way, who came home fourth and fifth, respectively, made up the rest of the field.

Carl Rosen's Prince Andrew had been the overnight favorite, in view of a recent six-length victory at Keystone. He was scratched, however.

Braulio Baeza, the outstanding Panamanian jockey, is expected to soon start wearing riding silks again. Absent from racing for the last two months, he was a surprise visitor in the morning to Belmont Park's backstretch, where he worked a horse over the main track. Baeza's problem has been overweight. . . . Bold Forbes, the winner of this year's Kentucky Derby and Belmont Stakes, and three of the other more important thoroughbreds stabled in New York yesterday were headed elsewhere. Bold Forbes was sent to Kentucky where he is to stand in stud. Honest Pleasure, Optimistic Gal and For the Moment were dispatched to Bert Firestone's farm in Virginia. The trio, however, is expected to return to racing this winter—in Florida. . . . What's In A Name Department? Jose Rodriguez returned to the Big A's jockey room yesterday toting a huge silver trophy he had won in Japan. The young Puerto Rican-born rider said he won it by triumphing in last Saturday's Tokyo International. He was vague about the monetary value of the race (said to be about $70,000) but completely in the dark about the name of the horse who had brought him home first. He unpacked a handsome silver cup from a case, saying perhaps the race's exact value and the winning horse's name were inscribed on the trophy. The engraving proved of no help. Naturally, it was in Japanese. "What I probably need most right now," concluded the jockey, "is a Japanese interpreter."

At Roosevelt . . .

Herve Filion, having had an unusually prosperous stand last week, during which he brought home nine winners, leads Merritt Dokey in purse earnings for the year at the Long Island track. Going into last night's card, Filion had a total 1976 income for the three Roosevelt meetings this year of $888,818, compared with $879,269 for his rival. Dokey is seeking his first Roosevelt driving championship and has a handy edge over Filion, 137-116, in winners' circle appearances.

Filly Bought for $275,000

49ers-Rams Selected As Top Game Sunday

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE

The big game in pro football this Sunday will be in San Francisco where the 49ers take on the Los Angeles Rams whom they defeated earlier, 16-0. The outcome will go a long way toward deciding the race in the National Conference's Western Division where the Rams hold a half-game lead over the 49ers. San Francisco has lost three in a row and the Rams two.

That contest will not be televised here and neither will Washington at St. Louis, the latter a last-grasp affair for the Redskins who are two games behind the Cardinals in the N.F.C. East. The television games here will be Houston at Pittsburgh followed by the Giants at Denver.

The Cardinals, who have lost only once, would seem to have their conference wild-card playoff position well in hand if they fail to catch Dallas for first place in the division. In the A.F.C. the Patriots are the leading wild-card contender and some playoff fever has gripped Boston.

There were about 2,000 fans at the Logan Airport to greet the team on its return from Baltimore after upsetting the Colts. The players were astounded because it had never happened to them before. "It's nice to know someone cares," said Steve Grogan, the quarterback.

But Sam Cunningham, Russ Francis and Steve Nelson were hurt. "We lost three front-line players," said Coach Chuck Fairbanks. "But the reserves had fine performances, especially Don Calhoun."

This obscure third-year-pro gained 41 yards as Cunningham's replacement.

Another quarterback was lost for the year when Lynn Dickey of the Green Bay Packers separated a shoulder against Chicago. That left Bart Starr with one healthy quarterback, Carlos Brown.

Who is he? A 12th-round draft choice, Brown has been on the team for two seasons and did some good work last summer in preseason games when Dickey was hurt. The Packers will add another quarterback and have several free agents in mind.

The Eagles are contemplating switching quarterbacks, Roman Gabriel for Mike Boryla, who had a poor game against Cleveland. The only trouble there is a commitment to younger players by Coach Dick Vermeil. He has said that the trouble with the Eagles in the past was that the coaches never had the patience to develop young quarterbacks.

Gabriel is 36, Boryla 25.

There were plenty of plaudits for Jim Hart, the St. Louis quarterback, for his showing in the second half against the Rams. "I don't think he has ever played better," said Harry Gilmer, the team's quarterback coach. Hart completed 13 of 16 pass attempts and he threw the ball away on two of the incompletions.

His line helped as the Rams never were able to touch Hart. That proved a point to Bud Goode, the noted computer analyst. An adviser to the Rams, Goode told Coach Chuck Knox that Los Angeles would have to sack Hart at least twice if it was to win the game.

Goode equates a quarterback sack to be worth 2 points. If team X, for example, has four sacks and team Y has two, then 4 points should show up in the final score in favor of team X.

Goode has other tenets. His mathematical analysis tells him that the worth of having more running plays than the opponent is 1 point; recovering a fumble 3 points; intercepting a pass 5 points and returning a kick for a touchdown 10 points.

In Atlanta only 20,058 turned out for the Falcons' game against the 49ers on a rainy, windy day with the temperature in the 30's. But 44,393 tickets had been sold in advance, so there were 24,335 no-shows. And the Falcons won, 21-16, for only their third victory.

What turned the Steelers around? Fear perhaps. In any event, the first five games, four of which were lost, have not resembled the second five, all won. The Steeler defense gave up 110 points in the first five and only 9 in the second five. In the last five they have outscored the opposition, 132-9.

Defense of Jets Brings Back The Shutout After Long Wait

ead. And when you have the lead, you can do anything you want."

So Neal was able to sack the quarterback twice yesterday from his defensive right end spot. The defensive pressure kept the Bucs so bottled up in the first half, when the game was decided, that the visitors got past midfield only once. None of their drives lasted longer than 3 minutes 42 seconds. That meant the Jets' defense was always fresh.

"We've had close games in the past that went right down to the end. But then someone would score," said Michaels. "Football has too many good offensive players. It makes it hard to shut out people."

Tampa Bay has, remember, been shut out four times. What would the Jets have done against an established club?

"It's difficult to say," said Michaels. "A different guy throwing the ball . . . in O.J. Simpson . . . who knows? A shutout is very unusual, though. We'll take it."

What also is unusual is a rookie rushing for 100 yards a game so consistently. The Jets' Clark Gaines now leads all the American Conference rookies with 428 yards. That doesn't sound like a lot of yardage, but he has carried only 85 times. He was not a starter till last month. His average of 5 yards a carry is the third best in the conference.

The rookie's effectiveness might even be heightened next Sunday against the New England Patriots. For Jerome Barkum, the speedy, tall and good wide receiver who has not played a game, has been running and might return.

But the rookie cornerback, Shafer Suggs, will not play against the Pats. He was the only Jet seriously injured yesterday, hurting an ankle. He tried several times to get up only to fall after the injury.

Joe Namath has an injured toe, which someone stepped on. He and Richard Todd will play at quarterback on Sunday, but Coach Lou Holtz did not say whether he would wait for a while before dramatically inserting Namath into the game as he did yesterday.

Giants Not Certain Morton Will Be Ready for Broncos

nder McVay the Giants have looked etter, especially on defense. In those hree games, they have allowed a total f 28 points and they have not allowed touchdown in 10 quarters. On the ther hand, the offense hasn't scored touchdown in 18 periods.

Jim Stienke, whose interception of a oe Theismann pass in the end zone with 34 seconds remaining preserved he victory, was one of the first players to give McVay a vote of confidence. "I'd love to see him back," Stienke said. "You ought to see this ocker room before a game. We're jumping up and down. With Ams, we didn't et really excited."

McVay has done more than just motivate players who had not won a game, which was the reason he was given the ob in the first place. He has added a ot of wrinkles, such as: ¶Using more litzes on defense. ¶Having the offensive line do more straight-ahead drive locking instead of the more sophisticated stuff it couldn't handle. ¶Using a hree-back power formation on third-own-and-short situations. This worked our of six times against the Redskins. ¶Moving Larry Watkins, one of the ower backs, to the outside on the unt coverage team because Larry Mallory and Rondy Colbert, two small defensive backs, were being jammed at he line of scrimmage.

Harry Carson's blitzing of Theismann elped cause Stienke's interception, the game films showed. The rookie linebacker was hitting the quarterback from behind as Theismann was attempting to throw the ball away. Had the pass gone out of the end zone, as Theismann intended, Mark Moseley could have tried a 24-yard field goal to tie the score. . . . Moseley, who made three of six field-goal attempts; Joe Danelo, who made four of five for the Giants, including the winning 50-yarder, and Snead all said they had trouble with the wind at Giants Stadium. "The winds sure are screwy in there," said McVay. "The flags on top of the stadium are blowing one way, the flags on top the goal posts the other way, and in the course of the game they switch."

Larry Csonka was "blocking like a demon," McVay said after watching the films. . . . Karl Chandler started at center for the first time in three games, but had to come out after two series because of his bad back. Doug Kotar played at halfback and gained 45 yards on a bad leg. . . . Brad Van Pelt, one of the "Washington Beards" (Giant players who vowed not to shave until they beat the Redskins), took his whiskers off after the game. "I thought there'd be a rush for the clippers," the linebacker said. There wasn't. Most of the Beards have decided hair is beautiful.

eceived a victory ride on the shoulders f his athletes. "But running against hose Villanova teams, you might as ell have stayed home."

McCurdy said it was an unusual quad, even by Harvard standards.

"All during training camp, they would be practicing huddles, like a ootball team, clapping and doing heers. They had everything from one otato, two potato to two-four-six-ight."

One pre-meet favorite, Providence, referred to skip yesterday's Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America competition and point toward the National Collegiate Athletic Association meet next Monday in Denton, Tex.

Pate, Stockton Named To U.S. World Cup Team

By JOHN S. RADOSTA

For the first time since 1971 the World Cup and International Trophy golf championships, which bring together the leading players of 48 countries, will be played in the United States.

The venue for the 24th tournament, Dec. 9 through 12, will be the Mission Hills Country Club near Palm Springs, Calif. The American team consists of Jerry Pate, the 1976 United States Open champion, and Dave Stockton, winner of this year's championship of the Professionl Golfers' Association.

In the World Cup the score for a two-man team is the sum of the players' cards over 72 holes. Simultaneusly the players compete for the individual International Trophy.

Jerry Pate

Famed Players Take Trophy

The United States is defending both titles. Last year Johnny Miller and Lou Graham won the cup in Thailand, and Miller won the individual trophy. Winners of the trophy over the last 23 years sound like a Who's Who of Golf—Ben Hogan, Arnold Palmer, Sam Snead, Peter Thomson, Roberto de Vicenzo, Gary Player, Jack Nicklaus, Lee Trevino and Miller.

The American team is chosen under a procedure set by the P.G.A. Tour. Pate, who won the Open in June with a spectacular 5-iron shot for a birdie on the 72d hole, will be playing in his first World Cup competition. Stockton is playing for the second time, his first being a pairing with Lee Trevino in 1970.

One of Spain's players will be Severarino Ballesteros, the 19-year-old sensation who tied Nicklaus for second in the 1976 British Open and the winner of three European tournaments this year.

Brian Barnes, the pipe-smoking Scottish professional who beat Nicklaus twice in one day during the 1975 Ryder Cup matches, will pair with Sam Torrance for Scotland.

The World Cup was established in 1953 to further "international good-will through golf," with seven countries competing in Canada.

This will be the third time the World Cup has been played in the United States. The United States team won on each previous occasion—Ed Furgol and Chick Harbert in 1955 and Nicklaus and Trevino in 1971.

Fans Are Flocking Away, Causing Concern in N.H.L.

By ROBIN HERMAN

The National Hockey League's board of governors is meeting in Key Largo, Fla., today to discuss hockey's most pressing problem, and the subject is not violence. Plummeting attendance figures are the main concern, and all but a few hockey franchises have been affected. The Cleveland Barons, with an average crowd of 5,330 over 10 games, and the Colorado Rockies, who have drawn an average of 5,572 in 11 games, are having the hardest time. But they expected to build fans slowly after moving from Oakland, Calif., and Kansas City, respectively.

About Pro Hockey

However, franchises such as Atlanta and Pittsburgh are doing poorly, as is Boston, where fans are still angry over the flight of Bobby Orr to Chicago. The Bruins are averaging 11,459 in a rink that can hold 14,597.

The clubs continuing to draw capacity crowds most of the time are Montreal, Toronto, New York Rangers, New York Islanders and Philadelphia. But elsewhere in the league the big crowds turn out in a very selective manner, choosing only to view strong visiting teams like Montreal, Buffalo, Philadelphia, the Islanders and Boston. The Rockies' worst home crowd was 3,763 for a game with Atlanta. When Colorado visited Boston Garden, only 9,968 were in attendance. A game Sunday night in Chicago between the Orrless Black Hawks and Los Angeles drew only 12,400.

But even more bothersome about the depressed attendance was the figure of 11,235 persons who came to the Atlanta Omni last Wednesday to see the Montreal Canadiens, the league champions and the biggest drawing card among the 18 teams.

"I don't know what to do anymore," said Cliff Fletcher, Atlanta's general manager. "We need to get some excitement going." The Flames' situation is puzzling because the team has a good chance for a playoff berth in the Lester Patrick Division and has such colorful players on its roster as Eric Vail and Tom Lysiak, as well as the sharp goaltending of Dan Bouchard and Phil Myre. Yet the crowds don't materialize.

Although the N.H.L. does not like to talk about merger with the World Hockey Association, the two leagues may find the dissolution of some weaker franchises and the creation of a two-conference league to be the inevitable solution to the woes of overexpansion.

The clubs with the best records in the league are the Boston Bruins and the New York Islanders, and the similarities only begin there. Each club leads its division with 27 points after 17 games for a .794 percentage. They are the only two teams in the league that have yet to lose at home. Each team has lost only one of its last 10 games and each has scored 13 power-play goals and given up 9. When they game ended in a 2-2 tie. played each other last Thursday the Going back to last season the Bruins have gone 28 games without a loss at Boston Garden. The Islanders have lost only one of their last 19 games at Nassau Coliseum.

But elsewhere in New York, home ice has not proved an advantage. With their 5-1 loss to the Pittsburgh Penguins Sunday, the New York Rangers set a mark for the longest losing streak in their own building, seven defeats. "I can't face my friends any more," said Nick Fotiu, the Ranger who grew up in New York's borough of Staten Island. "I mean, what are we going to talk about—all the losses? At first I blamed the fans for not supporting the team, but it's not the fans. It's us.

Garry Howatt will be out of the Islanders' lineup for approximately seven days because of a sprained left knee suffered on his first shift of Saturday night's game in Minnesota, a 3-2 victory for New York. He will not make the team's West Coast trip later this week.

The entire Islander team received the swine flu vaccine yesterday.

Gov. Ella T. Grasso of Connecticut, an avid hockey fan, thinks a $135,000 tax break given to the New England Whalers is a "ripoff."

The tax break was made possible last week when the city of Hartford took over as the promoter of the W.H.A. club, which had said it faced financial trouble.

The takeover means that the sale of tickets to the Whalers' games will be subject to a 10 percent state amusement tax, thus giving the team a windfall.

"It's apparently all perfectly legal, but doesn't it seem strange to you that the only way their problem can be solved is by sticking it to the state," the Governor said. She also said she would support legislation being drafted to close the loophole.

Wood, Field & Stream: Wildlife Art Displayed at 2 Manhattan Locations

By NELSON BRYANT

Some splendid contemporary wildlife paintings may be seen at Sportman's Edge Ltd. during the gallery's current exhibition of the works of David Maas and William Hollywood, which runs through Nov. 27.

One of the nation's leading retailers of contemporary wildlife and sporting art, Sportman's Edge, situated at 136 East 74th Street, places the work of Hollywood, who was born in England and trained at the Belfast College of Arts in Ireland, on public display for the first time in New York City.

Maas, a Minnesotan, was the winner of the 1974 Federal Migratory Waterfowl Stamp Contest. He had no formal art training, but after a stint for a commercial art firm, he turned, in 1961 to studying, sketching and painting the upland birds and waterfowl of his native state.

Maas's paintings are in private collections throughout the country, and Hollywood's are in the United States, Ireland and Britain.

Alfred F. King 3d, who opened Sportman's Edge four years ago, also produces original prints of some of the work of the artists shown at his gallery, with 500 copies being the usual number. King also puts out an annual catalogue, and this handsome book is, King feels, one of the main reasons for the success of his endeavor.

Other stunning wildlife paintings, including the work of Ogden Pleissner, a truly gifted American artist, may be seen in midtown Manhattan at The Crossroads of Sport Inc., 5 East 47th Street.

In addition to originals and prints, Crossroads offers a wide variety of ceramics, china, carvings, glassware and other items executed with a sporting motif.

This writer once remarked that creating flies for trout and salmon angling has so captivated some fishermen that they become more interested in it than the sport for which the flies are intended. This remark was probably the result of a touch of envy, for my own flies often look as if they had been tied in a gale of wind after an all-night party

Those who wish to view a superb presentation of the work of some of the best fly-tiers in the world should see William Cushner's show, which will run from Dec. 5 to Jan. 31 at the National Art Museum of Sports Inc. in the Madison Square Garden Center. Assembling this collection has been a costly six-year endeavor for Cushner, a picture framer, designer and artist.

The Canadians Take a Glance At Ballet Past

By CLIVE BARNES

Special to The New York Times

TORONTO, Nov. 15 — Yesterday afternoon the National Ballet of Canada, now in its 25th anniversary season at the O'Keefe Center, took an affectionate glance at its past. The ballet was the company's restaging of John Cranko's "Romeo and Juliet," but the performance became a collector's item not only because it featured some of the older dancers in the ballet, but also because the audience was full of the company's former members. And at the end they all trouped up on stage to take part in the curtain calls.

For Lilian Jarvis, who played Juliet, it was a personal triumph. One of the early members of the troupe, she had not danced for 13 years and she was making her debut as Juliet. It would have been a nice enough performance in any circumstances, but considering it as a return from long retirement, it was little short of a miracle.

The Romeo was Hazarof Surmeyan, now a company teacher and mime, who returned to active dancing after a year off to give his last performance in the role in which he made his debut with the company 10 years ago. He was splendid—ardent in his acting, brilliant in his dancing.

Two other former members of the company, in mime roles, were Celia Franca, the company's founder and until two years ago its artistic director, as a finely dramatic Lady Capulet, and Yves Cousineau, still a great mime as Tybalt.

Clinton Rothwell had a busy but successful day, dancing a dashing Mercutio in the afternoon, and then coming back in the evening performance to give a decently malevolent Tybalt. The Juliet of the evening was Veronica Tennant, who danced most beautifully. It was a portrayal urgent in its feeling and delicate in its dancing. Her Romeo was Frank Augustyn, who seemed far more at ease than he had partnering Karen Kain the night before, and the whole performance went with the right kind of tragic zest.

American Place Bill Delayed

The American Place Theater has postponed the opening of its program of two short plays, "Comanche Cafe" and "Domino Courts," both by Bill Hauptman, to Dec. 2. The delay was caused by the illness of Conard Fowkes, one of the principal performers. The actor was hospitalized on Saturday with a kidney ailment.

The two one-act plays have been giving previews since last Tuesday and will continue giving them through Sunday, with Baxter Harris replacing Mr. Fowkes. Mr. Fowkes is expected to be fully recovered by Dec. 2.

Higgins Is Moving His Fair Lady to Lunt-Fontanne

"My Fair Lady," the popular revival of the Alan Jay Lerner-Frederick Loewe musical adapted from Shaw's "Pygmalion," will move from the St. James Theater after the matinee of Dec. 5 to take up residence at the Lunt-Fontanne Theater on Dec. 8. Ian Richardson, Christine Andreas, George Rose and Robert Coote will continue as the show's stars.

The move was necessitated by the booking of a new musical into the St. James. It is "Music Is," George Abbott's adaptation of Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night."

Australians to Aid Concert for UNICEF

Joan Sutherland, Zoe Caldwell, Cyril Ritchard and other Australian artists will take part in "The Rights of a Child Concert" to be held Dec. 12 in the General Assembly of the United Nations as a celebration of the 30th anniversary of UNICEF. The concert will be sponsored by the Government of Australia.

Miss Caldwell and Mr. Ritchard will act as hosts, and other artists will include Richard Bonynge, Marjorie Lawrence, June Bronhill, John Meehan, Marilyn Row, Kathryn Selby, Rolf Harris, Renée Geyer, John McNally, Barry Crocker and James Pegler. Sir Robert Helpman will be in charge of the gala's artistic direction.

Tickets, priced from $15 to $100, may be obtained by mail from Tom O'Keefe at the United States Committee for UNICEF, 331 East 38th Street, New York 10016. For further information, phone 686-5529.

Gunn to Replace Williams in 'Dream'

Moses Gunn, who was nominated for a Tony last season for his starring role in "The Poison Tree," will replace Billy Dee Williams as the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. in "I Have a Dream" on Nov. 30. The play, based on the words of the late civil rights leader, will continue its limited engagement at the Ambassador through Jan. 2.

Judyann Elder will continue as Coretta King in the production, which was conceived and directed by Robert Greenwald. Sunday evening performances resumed last weekend.

Brooklyn Academy Schedules 'Joseph'

"Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," a musical by the authors of "Jesus Christ Superstar," will be a Christmas attraction at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, playing in the Academy's opera house from Dec. 23 through Jan. 9.

The Andrew Lloyd Webber-Tim Rice work, based on the biblical story of Joseph, will be directed by Frank Dunlop, who previously staged it with the Young Vic in England. Mr. Dunlop is also noted for his productions of "Scapino" and "Sherlock Holmes," both in London and on Broadway.

Music: Berlin's Rapid Requiem

Von Karajan Streamlines Mozart's Soul-Searching as Orchestra and Vienna Singverein Hurry Up

By DONAL HENAHAN

The Mozart Requiem, inexhaustible work that it is, lends itself to any number of interpretations, but two extremes may easily be recognized. There is, on the extreme Romantic side, the kind of brooding meditation that Karl Böhm favored in recent years. With its sometimes ponderous tempos and portentous gestures, this Mozart Requiem paints a tragic picture of man's life and death, and is in a definite Germanic tradition.

Other conductors stress a more Roman Catholic view, giving us the Requiem as a service for a soul that has been released and transported to a better place. Mozart himself was a good Viennese Catholic most of his life, but he seems to have had his doubts near the end, so either of these approaches may be argued plausibly.

What this listener cannot rationalize, however, is the kind of streamlined, superprofessional performance led by Herbert van Karajan lat night at Carnegie Hall. Mr. von Karajan, conducting his Berlin Philharmonic, the Vienna Singverein and a quartet of capable vocal soloists, rushed through the Requiem in what surely must have been record time, missing interpretative point after point. He achieved many triumphs of luscious tone-blending along the way as well as the requisite number of bone-rattling climaxes.

The Berlin is a fine orchestra—not perfect, as some sloppy trombone work in the Tuba Mirum demonstrated—and Mr. von Karajan has few peers as an orchestral technician. Nonetheless, this performance measured up only in its parts, and did not add up to a deeply moving whole.

The soloists fit perfectly into the Karajan scheme of things, though Anna Tomowa-Sintow's soprano was sometimes distressingly thin and expressionless. The others were Agnes Baltsa, mezzo-soprano; Werner Krenn, tenor, and Jose Van Dam, bass-baritone, and despite their obvious talents, the cumulative effect was antiseptic.

The program's other piece, Bruckner's "Te Deum," gave Mr. von Karajan and his forces a more congenial score to work with. Here, the listener could innocently revel in thunderous fortissimos and gossamer pianissimos, and trust that the Lord would be satisfied with praise on the highest level of orchestral and vocal excellence.

Music: 12 Cellos

Berlin Philharmonic Players Offer Unusual Program

By PETER G. DAVIS

One of the more bizarre spin-offs of the Berlin Philharmonic's current visit to New York occurred Sunday night in Carnegie Recital Hall, where the orchestra's 12 cellists gathered to perform a most peculiar program. The small auditorium (300 seats) was packed to capacity—mostly, it would seem, by the orchestra's friends and families since German was the predominant language of the evening.

Exactly how the idea of a concert featuring a dozen cellos got started is a bit vague, but evidently "The Twelve," as they are called in Berlin, have been playing with considerable success in Europe for the last three years. Perhaps the inspiration came from one Julius Klengel (1859-1933), in his day a famous cellist who composed a threnody for 12 solo cellos entitled "Hymnus," first performed at the funeral of the conductor Artur Nikisch in 1922.

"Hymnus" naturally figured on the program, as did an arrangement of a gamba suite by an obscure early baroque composer, David Funck (1629-90). A number of contemporary composers, it seems, have been intrigued by the sonorous possibilities of such an unusual grouping (and doubtlessly by the Berliners' virtuosity too), and three of the works were composed especially for "The Twelve": "Melodia—Ritmica" by Helmut Eder, "Aubade" by Jean Françaix and "Blues—Espagnola—Rumba Philharmonica" by the late Boris Blacher.

All of the music turned out to be pretty trashy stuff, but it did serve the purpose of showing off the kind of sounds 12 cellos can produce in consort. There was lushness to spare, pizzicato fireworks aplenty, all sorts of tricky antiphonal effects and in general enough busy work to keep each player on his toes. Needless to say, the Berliners played stupendously, both individually and as a group, but after it was over, one had heard a sufficient amount of cello fun and games to last a long, long time.

Mr. Millard has served half of a six-and-a-half-year sentence for smuggling cocaine, and the Mexican authorities are concerned that since he did not commit a crime on American soil they would have no hold on him once he was back in the United States. Billed as one of the nation's "living national treasures," Tony Bennett, the longtime singer of popular songs, performed for a sold-out audience at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington Sunday night. After his show, Mr. Bennett, who was born Anthony Dominick Benedetto 50 years ago on Long Island, said he was "beginning for the first time to slow down." He said his ambition was to do "an album a year of top songs" with pianist-arranger Bill Evans. Among those in the Smithsonian audience was Mr. Bennett's 22-year-old son, Danny, who is putting together a new rock band for which he sings, composes and plays piano and guitar.

Can a law designed to keep the Ku Klux Klan in check hobble Santa Claus? In Owensboro, Ky., City Attorney Larry Harrington is concerned because a 1924 ordinance that prohibits persons gathering in public "with masks over their faces" was recently revived to fine two men who dressed up in aluminum masks as "Martians" to play a joke on a friend. The prank was carried out at 2 A.M. and the friend, a grocery store owner, didn't think it was funny. He thought it was a holdup and called the police. "If [the law] prohibits Martians, it prohibits Santa Claus, too," Mr. Harrington said. He is seeking a revision of the ordinance so that it "would not prohibit small groups of people from depicting characters to carry out the intent of some humorous purpose."

The Secret of Those Rave Reviews, Or, the Confessions of a Pen Pal

By HERBERT MITGANG

Governors do it. Ministers and rabbis do it. Show-biz personalities love to do it. Good neighbors and friends do it—especially if they want to remain on speaking terms. And, above all, fellow writers do it.

What they all do is plug one another's literary (and sometimes not-so-literary) works. Quite often they mean it.

The rave advance comment has become a part of the mysterious process by which a relative handful of books become the talked-up tomes of the season. There is no harm done, except perhaps to the gullible reader who takes the word of publishing's pen pals without going to the library or bookstore and judging for himself.

The other day, for example, a heavy breather of a first novel, "Blue Skies, No Candy," by Gael Greene, who normally works the kitchen beat for New York magazine, came out with the usual ruffles and flourishes. The book itself received what the trade calls mixed notices, but the advance comments were brilliant.

'Outrageously Funny'

Among others, A. E. Hotchner, the Hemingway biographer, called it "an outrageously funny and sexy book," Jimmy Breslin was quoted as saying, "If this is what happens when you let them out of the kitchen, I'm all for it," and Betty Friedan, the feminist-rights advocate, said, "It's new and fun to read an erotic book written by a woman, about a woman who takes extraordinary joy in sex instead of suffering it as misery."

Miss Friedan, author of "The Feminine Mystique" and "It Changed My Life," was only a bit embarrassed when asked to elaborate on her advance quotation, which seemed to be stretching the mystique to include what others have described as a rather raunchy tale.

Associated Press

Gael Greene

The notices were mixed, the comments were brilliant.

"The novel is a step in a positive direction," she said, "even if I don't agree with every aspect of it. It's an improvement over the masochistic novels exploiting sex. I seldom give quotes but I do make it a practice to read a friend's book and, yes, Gael Greene is a personal friend."

In a time when the most influential book "critic" is not a person but a hand—the anonymous hand that holds up the book jacket for television audiences on the "Today" show, which publicity people regard as the best means of promoting a title and author—it is little wonder that advance comments by respected names are used to help get the buzz started about a book. Commercial television reaches for viewers instead of the readers; by comparison, quotations by authors who read and write are taken seriously.

Jessica Mitford sardonically suggests in the current issue of The Authors Guild Bulletin that publishers furnish blurb writers a checklist of desirable phrases for use on book jackets. Her notion resulted from the fact that when she gave an endorsement saying a book was "totally absorbing," the embarrassed author wrote back saying that the publisher wanted something stronger, like "highly significant and compelling drama."

"The checklist could be graduated," Miss Mitford writes, "starting with such tried-and-true descriptions as 'blockbuster' and ending with my poor old ineffective 'totally absorbing.' I believe this would save everybody a lot of time, particularly if the list were coded. One would merely have to notify the publisher of the code number (e.g., 1 for Blockbuster, 18 for Totally Absorbing), and would thus be spared the agonies of composition."

Game for Reader

The game for the reader is to attempt to read between the lines of praise, which is never less than fulsome. It requires a built-in detector to separate palship from selected quotes by some professional critics who, unfortunately, also occasionally sound like salespersons.

Kind advance words come from all quarters. Governor Carey calls "Enter the Irish-American," by Edward Wakin, due this month, "eminently readable." Dr. Norman Vincent Peale describes Lowell Thomas's "Good Evening Everybody" as "one of the most interesting books of the era." Dan Rather of CBS News calls the reissued edition of "Not So Wild a Dream" by Eric Sevareid of CBS News "a must-read."

Even The New Yorker writers rise to the occasion to celebrate the publication of a book by an author from their own magazine. Renata Adler's novel "Speedboat," also in the mixed-review category, is said to include "a brilliant series of glimpses" into contemporary life by Donald Barthelme, and to be "as blazingly intelligent as any [novel] that I have read in years" by Brendan Gill.

Probably the most honest quotation in recent memory was given by Groucho Marx when his own "Groucho and Me" appeared. Supplying his own, he said, "Not since 'David Copperfield' have I read such a stirring and inspiring life story."

Special to The New York Times

NEW HAVEN—Lillian Hellman's "The Autumn Garden" is an end-of-summer play. Some of the guests may return to the Tuckerman house next year just as they have in previous years, but the holiday—perhaps all holidays—is over. There is an asperity in the wind as these characters make an accounting of the bankruptcy of their lives—the lack of fulfillment that is endemic to everyone in the play. People do not change, the author seems to be saying, they simply grow older and become more ingrained.

The atmosphere is too acerbic to be Chekhovian—no plangent plucking of heartstrings, but whisky in the morning and epigrams and epithets as the sun goes down. The play, which was first produced on Broadway in 1951 and has now been given a faultless revival by Arvin Brown at the Long Wharf Theater, is filled with some of Miss Hellman's sharpest and funniest dialogue.

Cleverness abounds, much of it arising from character, some of it superimposed as if the author wanted to distribute the verbal wealth evenly. The play is very theatrical, at times to the detriment of its own humanity. Can such sad, useless people have so many insights into their own behavior? One wishes that the author had trusted her characters more and been less concerned about traditions of dramaturgy.

But "The Autumn Garden" reminds one of Miss Hellman's incisiveness and urbanity as a playwright and makes one wish that she were still active in the theater. If nothing else—and there is much more—it is a handsome opportunity for actors to work together as an ensemble. Unlike "The Little Foxes," this play has no dominant character but is instead an aggregate of interwoven personalities, each one feeding off the others. It demands a company of actors rather than star performers. The play is perfectly at home at Long Wharf.

Actually there are two pivotal figures. Twenty years before the time of the play, Nick proposed marriage to Constance and then walked out on her. Now he returns with his wife and his attitude of self-service. For Constance, the homecoming could be—as she idealizes it—a source of rejuvenation. Instead it is a fruitless return to the past.

Carolyn Coates shows us that Constance is not only a bit of a fool but also a helpless little girl. Wisely, John McMartin plays down Nick's flamboyance, keeps him callow, and manages to give him an ingenuous charm. His Nick simply can't help himself.

The evening's best performance comes from Josef Sommer as Constance's sardonic long-time suitor. It is perhaps an easy role—his lines have a biting humor—but Mr. Sommer plays him superlatively. Quietly and gently, he makes us feel the roots of the character's cynicism, the inward malaise that forces him to be his own victim. On the strength of this and other performances, many of them in regional theater, it is clear that Mr. Sommer is one of our finest character actors.

Charlotte Moore instills the sketchy role of Nick's wife with humanity; repeatedly we wonder why she continues to be attached to her superficial husband. When she, Mr. Sommer and James Noble—as a general saddled with a flibberty-gibbet wife—walk out of the house together to go on an all-day picnic, it is a moment of great liberation. We find ourselves allied with these three characters, wishing them to be free of the household's exasperations.

There is also intelligent work by Joyce Ebert, Susan Sharkey and Carmen Mathews, as a lordly grand dame. David Jenkins's set, a large living room and terrace, at the same time homey and just a little frayed adds an extra measure of authenticity to a thoroughly felicitous production.

Zukerman Offers Dual Talents

A number of fine violinists are expert violists as well (and vice versa), but not too many would relish the task of performing concertos on both instruments at the same concert. Pinchas Zukerman is obviously one who does, and Sunday afternoon at the Metropolitan Museum he brought distinction to both halves of his double assignment with Frederic Waldman and the Musica Aeterna Orchestra.

First Mr. Zukerman played Telemann's Viola Concerto in G, then he returned with the fiddle for the elegant concerto snuggled into three interior movements of Mozart's Serenade in D, K.203. It may have been in questionable scholarship to present the latter score in such fashion—with the opening portion of the Serenade used as a kind of overture and the last four movments dropped altogether—but it was a delight to hear.

There, and in the Telemann too, tonal felicity was Mr. Zukerman's most persuasive ally. The viola sound was richly burnished, while the violin sang sweetly, suffusing the music with unhurried charm. Mr. Waldman led supple accompaniments that did much to enhance the spirit of gracious entertainment for which the pieces (at least the Serenade) originally came into being. Mr. Zukerman, incidentally, refused to bow after the Mozart until the orchestra members stood up to share the applause. It was a generous gesture and, in this instance, an appropriate one.

Mr. Waldman gave several of his string players a chance for solo shining in the opening Concerto Grosso in E Minor by Geminiani, and he also led a pleasingly timbred performance of Debussy's "Petite Suite." The program closed with Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, rather straitlaced, even a bit stolid at times, yet not without its bubbly moments, especially in the finale.

Lando Bartolini sang Alfredo's music with considerable ease but little color and he made an awkward lover.

Though Richard Fredricks, as Germont, was a far more accomplished partner, his phrasing lacked warmth. The big second-act duet between Germont and Violetta, which might have been the evening's highlight, was a disappointingly stiff affair.

PLANT IN SIXTH STATE HAS MYSTERY ILLNESS

The Workers in All Make Electric Components, Use Some Chemicals and Are Principally Women

By REGINALD STUART
Special to The New York Times

GROVE CITY, Ohio, Nov. 15—Katherine Francis, a 33-year-old salvage worker in the Robertshaw Controls Company plant here, has been feeling sick since August.

It is frequently hard for her to stay awake, she says. Headaches have become commonplace in her life in recent weeks, as have upset stomachs and more than the usual degree of nervousness.

The problems of this mother of four children would probably have been written off as just another isolated case of personal illness, had not other employees at this plant, mostly women, experienced the same symptoms of illness.

"When it first happened, I laughed at those girls," she recalled, when discussing the three sudden episodes of sickness on the job that affected several dozen employees in each instance, once in August and twice in September. Now, she says, the situation is no longer a laughing matter.

Other Similar Incidents

It is a mystery, officials at Robertshaw and occupational health specialists familiar with the situation here say, when asked about the exact cause of the illness. They only agree that the experience here is similar, in many respects, to others recently reported elsewhere.

Episodes of sudden illness on the job, have occurred recently in at least five other states—Pennsylvania, Florida, Oregon, Indiana and Minnesota. In each case, the plants involved are producers of electric components. They use a variety of chemicals to a limited extent in their operations. And women make up a majority of the employees.

"What we are dealing with is a combination of bad work practices, situations in which there are a wide range of solvents used, bad ventilation and poor management," said Samuel S. Epstein, an authority in the field of occupational health and safety.

Dr. Epstein, of Chicago, was a consultant for workers at the Robertshaw plant represented by the International Brotherhood of Teamsters Local 413. During the last decade he has been a consultant on occupational health issues to other unions and several Congressional committees.

He said that unlike cases of illness that have been traced to specific chemical agents, most of the more recent experiences have presented situations in which the symptoms — headaches, dizziness, vomiting, drowsiness—are common off the job as well as on and they are of a fairly short duration.

Causes Believed Found

Some companies, such as Litton Industries plant in Grant's Pass, Ore., and The Control Data Corporation in Minneapolis, found specific situations in their plants that they felt were the causes of the episodes of illness among their workers. A leaking tank, in the Oregon case was replaced. In the Minnesota case, a change in the manner in which chemicals were handled resulted in no future episodes of illness.

But elsewhere, "a combination of things," is about the best explanation one can elicit from those who are probing these situations.

In the two Pennsylvania towns, Kittanning and Punxsutawney, no conclusions have been reached as to the causes of the illnesses. But the episodes have been stopped for all practical puposes by improved ventilation of the plants involved and some minor adjustments in handling of chemicals.

Here, where company officials and union representatives are to discuss what long-range actions should be taken to eliminate the future possibility of the outbreaks of illness, the same type of action—improving ventilation and adjusting chemical handling procedures—has been taken.

And in St. Petersburg Florida, at the TRW St. Petersburgh Division, improving the ventilation was about all that officials could find to do after 18 employees contracted sore throats, nausea and fainting spells last month.

Simultaneous Problems

"There's no question that there are chemicals making people sick," said J. William Lloyd, epidemiologist for the United Steelworkers of America. "A lot of people look upon these symptoms as not being serious because there's no evidence of immediate serious damage to internal organs," he said. "But we don't know what the long-term effects will be."

MEXICAN ENERGY PRICES ARE INCREASED SHARPLY

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 15 (AP) — The prices of gasoline, bottled gas, diesel fuel and electricity were sharply increased today to raise money to further develop Mexico's energy resources.

Gasoline prices went up 33 percent and some electrical rates were increased as much as 52 percent.

Regular gasoline, advertised at 82 octane, goes from 2.10 pesos for a liter—slightly more than a quart—to 2.80 pesos. Unleaded extra, advertised at 91 octane, goes from 3 to 4 pesos a liter.

In United States currency and measurements, the new prices work out to about 45 cents a gallon for regular gasoline and 64 cents a gallon for extra—up from 33.6 cents and 48 cents a gallon. Prices in terms of American currency were substantially higher prior to the roughly 50 percent devaluation of the peso on Sept. 1.

Another round of price advances is expected in Mexico since higher gasoline, diesel fuel and electricity will increase the cost of trucking and running factories.

We haven't missed a dividend since 1894

Rexnord-a different kind of capital goods company

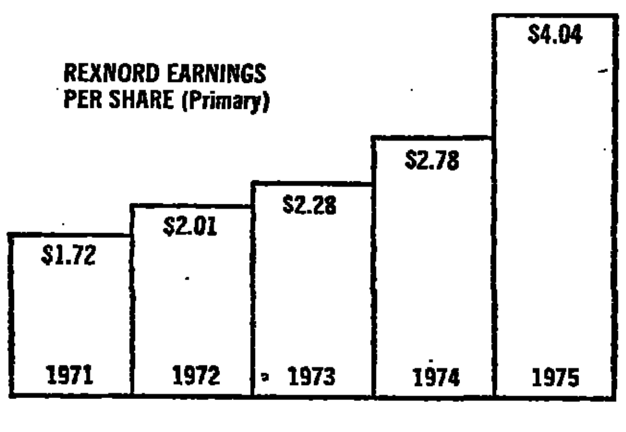
Rexnord has paid cash dividends to shareholders for 83 consecutive years, one of the longest records of any industrial company listed on the New York Stock Exchange. A long and consistent record of dividends to stockholders, through good times and bad, is an important investment criteria. We are proud of that record at Rexnord. And during the past two years the common dividend has been increased three times, to the current rate of $1.32 per share, a 22% increase.

Consistent sales and earnings increases are of course the basis of this dividend policy.

Rexnord Strategies Are Paying Off

Sales-1975 was the 14th consecutive year in which Rexnord achieved record sales. Over the five-year period from 1971 through 1975, sales have increased at an average annual rate of 13%. Sales through the third quarter of 1976 are $425,000,000, a new high for the period.



Earnings-Over the five years from 1971 through 1975, earnings per common share have increased from $1.72 to $4.04 per share or at an annualized rate of 17%. And through the third quarter of 1976 primary earnings per common share are $3.88, up 23% from $3.15 in 1975.

Industry's consumable components and proprietary replacement parts make up more than half of Rexnord's total sales. These are the kinds of products that must be replaced and renewed on a continuing basis. Unlike a major capital goods investment, the purchase of these essentials can't be deferred for long. A worn chain, sprocket, bearing or coupling must be replaced and Rexnord makes them all and more.

This emphasis on components helps broaden the base of our markets too. These consumables for industry go to a wide variety of markets, including agricultural production, food processing, coal mining, quarrying and rock crushing, other raw material processing markets, materials handling and many more. And this broad market base tends to reduce the cyclicality of our business. That's a different approach for a capital goods company...and we have others.

Capitalizing on Offsetting Business Cycles. In the U.S. our broadening market and product mix helps minimize the usual cyclical sales pattern of a capital goods company. In fact, in 1975 no single industry accounted for as much as 15% of our total sales. What's more, many of the markets we serve have offsetting cyclical patterns.

The business cycle of our Process Machinery operations differs from the cycle of Construction Machinery, which also differs from our Environmental Control Equipment line. Temporary softness in one business is usually offset by strength in the others.

The multinational aspect of Rexnord manufacturing and marketing facilities helps us serve world markets from the most strategic world source. And it lets us capitalize on the counter-cyclical nature of world markets.

Growth Markets and the Examination of Our Product Portfolio. A key part of our corporate strategy is to have the right products for the right markets for today and for the long haul. This requires continuing market evaluation in terms of current profitability and future potential from existing products. And we're constantly probing for new products and markets with solid future profit potential.

As a result of this strategy, we have made significant acquisitions in the U.S.A. and world-wide, and have disposed of product lines and facilities that didn't measure up to our long range goals.

It is this strategy which has permitted Rexnord to build a company well situated to serve markets with above average growth prospects for the future.

Expanding Our World-Wide Market Base. In 1975 sales of Rexnord products outside the U.S.A. amounted to over $200,000,000, an increase of 31% over 1974, and produced 40% of our pre-tax profits.

Rexnord operates 62 plants world-wide. Our world-wide marketing organization and manufacturing facilities allow us to serve world markets from the most advantageous source.

Rexnord and Tomorrow. Rexnord is a world-wide manufacturer and marketer of components and finished products essential to the basic needs of the world: The need for a sustained food supply, for raw material production, for preserving and improving the environment and for industrial expansion.

We have developed and implemented a number of basic strategies for the conduct of our business. They have proven right over the past several years and we believe that when applied with a flexible hand they will provide a prosperous future course for our shareholders and employees.

Write for more Information. These are a few reasons why Rexnord is a different kind of capital goods company. If you would like to know more, we would be happy to send you our new Annual Report and Corporate Brochure which will be published soon. For copies, write W. C. Messinger, Chairman, Rexnord Inc., P.O. Box 2022, Milwaukee, WI 53201.

CARTER'S COMMENTS SPUR RISE IN STOCKS; TRADING STILL SLOW

Dow in a Gain of 7.73 to 935.42—Sprague Adds 6¾ on Cable's Bid —Active Chrysler Is Up by ⅞

By ALEXANDER R. HAMMER

The stock market, reacting favorably yesterday to comments made by President-elect Jimmy Carter, posted a moderate gain in continued slow trading.

At the close, the Dow Jones industrial average was ahead 7.73 points at 935.42, its high for the session. Before the start of Mr. Carter's news conference at 2 P.M., the average was up 1.25 points.

Analysts attributed the upswing mainly to Mr. Carter's statements yesterday in Plains, Ga., that he hoped to avoid mandatory wage-price controls by a voluntary commitment from business and labor to try to "hold down inflationary pressure."

He added that unemployment, now at 7.9 percent, could be cut to 4.5 percent over the next three to four years "before excessive inflationary pressures will be felt."

In the previous two weeks, the Dow lost 37.24 points mainly on investor apprehension over the slowing rate of growth of the economy.

The gain in the Dow yesterday was reduced by 0.91 point because International Paper, Minnesota Mining and Sears, key components of the average, were all selling exdividend.

Advances on the New York Stock Exchange outnumbered declines by a 7-to-5 ratio.

Sprague Second on Active List

The biggest gainer was Sprague Electric, which soared 6¾ points to 19⅝ after hitting a 1976 high of 19¾. The issue was the second most actively traded on a turnover of 309,600 shares.

After the close Friday, General Cable offered to purchase all of Sprague's common stock at $19.50 a share. The offer has been unanimously approved by directors of Sprague and recommended to Sprague shareholders.

The volume leader was Chrysler, which tacked on ⅞ to 18¾ on a 315,100-share turnover. On Friday the Army selected Chrysler to develop and build its new main battle tank that is expected to cost $4.9 billion over the next decade.

Despite high bullion prices abroad, the gold-mining stocks closed lower. ASA fell ½ to 21⅜, Campbell Red Lake Mines, ⅞ to 24½; Dome Mines, ¼ to 43½, and Homestake Mining, ¼ to 36⅞. In London, gold prices soared by $3.25 an ounce to $138.85, the highest level there since January.

Five issues in the Dow accounted for almost half of the gain yesterday in the key indicator. These included Du Pont, which rose 1¼ to 128½; Eastman Kodak, ½ to 85⅜; International Paper, ⅞ to 65½; Procter & Gamble, 1½ to 92, and Sears, ⅞ to 67⅛.

Yesterday Du Pont declared a yearend extra dividend of 50 cents in addition to the regular quarterly $1.25 dividend. This brings the company's dividends for the year to $5.25 a share, up from $4.25 a share in 1975. In 1974, the nation's largest chemical producer paid out $5.50 a share.

Industrial Production Off In October for a 2d Month

0.5% Drop Reflects a Cut in Demand—Inventories Up

By EDWIN L. DALE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—Industrial production, a major indicator of the performance of the economy, declined in October for the second consecutive month, the Federal Reserve Board reported today.

The drop was five-tenths of 1 percent from September, which in turn was revised downward. "Somewhat less than one-third" of the October decline was attributable to the strike at the Ford Motor Company and other srtikes, the report said, meaning that the rest must have reflected reduced demand for the output of the nation's factories, mines and utilities.

Today's report is bound to increase the discussion of new measures to stimulate the economy under the forthcoming Administration of Jimmy Carter, though it is unlikely itself to trigger a decision. Mr. Carter has said he will want to look at the development of the economy for the fourth quarter as a whole before making a decision on a tax cut or other stimulus.

Rise Lasted Until August

Following a steep decline in the 1974-75 recession, industrial production began a sustained rise in the spring of 1975 that lasted until August of this year. Then, contrary to nearly all forecasts, it suddenly slipped again in September and October.

Most economists continue to forecast a resumption of the upward trend for this and other indicators, but doubts have begun to emerge.

The revision for September converted a preliminary estimate of no change in production to a decline of two-tenths of 1 percent. This was followed by the estimated drop of five-tenths of 1 percent in October, though this figure is still preliminary.

Declines in production were widespread in October, including basic materials such as steel, chemicals, paper and textiles and finished products such as clothing, household goods and business equipment.

The slowdown or "pause" has completely halted the improvement in the unemployment situation, with a rise in the jobless rate to 7.9 percent in October.

In another report today the Commerce Department said business inventories rose by $2.6 billion in September after a $2.4 billion increase in August. These sizable increases may have been in part "involuntary" however because of a decline in sales, particularly in September.

The report said total business sales declined by five-tenths of 1 percent in September following an almost steady rise after the recession low.

Inventories in September rose by $1.4 billion at the manufacturing level, $509 million at wholesale and $730 million at retail. With inventories up and sales down the ratio of inventories to sales rose to 1.51 at the end of September from 1.49 in August, but th s ratio—which had been declining as excess inventories were worked off—remained below the 1.54 figure of a year earlier.

There is no precise measure of when inventories are "too high," though a running off of excess inventories is invariably a key element in the decline of production associated with recession. Inventory growth is a positive factor in the economy in normal times of rising demand but can be a danger sign if demand begins to decline for any reason.

The Federal Reserve report on industrial production said output last month was at an index figure of 130.4, with 1967 taken as 100. It was 131 in September and 131.3 at the current recovery peak in August. The record peak was 131.9 in June 1974, before the recession began.

S.E.C. Offers Plan For the Settlement Of Small Disputes

By ROBERT D. HERSHEY Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—The Securities and Exchange Commission outlined today a proposal under which disputes between investors and their brokers involving up to $5,000 could be resolved without resort to expensive and time-consuming litigation.

The procedure, according to Roderick M. Hills, chairman of the agency, would help individuals—but not brokers—win in disputes on such questions as crediting dividends, executing orders or failure by either side to deliver securities or money.

It is expected that machinery for the process would be in operation by the end of 1977 and that its costs would not result in any increase in present commission levels.

The new procedures were drawn up by the commission's Office of Consumer Affairs, which declared the present system of relying on litigation and industry-sponsored arbitration to resolve controversies not sufficiently "responsive to the needs of investors."

The S.E.C. announced last spring plans to institute a grievance procedure that would incorporate many of the features of a small claims court, one element of the plan that emerged today.

Public Comment Solicited

The three parts of the proposal, on which public comment is solicited until Dec. 31 prior to final adoption, are these:

¶Each brokerage firm would be required to institute a system for processing and disposing of customer complaints "in a manner that will insure full and fair consideration" of their merit and that would result in periodic reporting of relevant information to the S.E.C. and self-regulatory organizations.

¶A uniform process would be established under which the parties would engage in nonbinding, informal mediation. If that failed, a formal but streamlined arbitration would take place for disputes involving up to $5,000.

¶For claims of less than $1,000, which would not justify either litigation or arbitration, there would be a network of professional small-claims adjusters empowered to make settlement offers.

None of these procedures would be compulsory and deny an investor the right to sue his broker, but if he accepted the small-claims decision he would waive his rights to additional compensation.

The system would be administered by

Big Board Starts Dismissing 125 In Step Meant to Save $4 Million

By LEONARD SLOANE

The New York Stock Exchange announced yesterday the details of its expected staff reorganization, involving the dismissal of about 125 employees, including nine officers.

The reorganization — based on an operations study by the management consulting firm of Cresap, McCormick & Paget and approved by the exchange's board of directors—reduces the staff of 1,550 people by 8 percent. It is expected to save some $3 million annually in labor costs and a further $1 million by the cessation of approximately 24 work projects.

Sixty of the employees in clerical, middle management and top-level jobs were informed yesterday of their dismissal and were told that they were terminated immediately. They will remain on the payroll, however, for varying periods up to six months, depending on their length of service and position with the exchange.

The highest ranking official who lost his job was Samuel A. Gay, senior vice president for market operations and membership services. Mr. Gay, who is 54, had been at the exchange since 1971.

Two vice presidents were also in the group that received their notices yesterday. They are Bruce Cobden, the 48-year-old vice president-personnel who had been at the exchange since 1960, and David D. Huntoon, 50, vice president-regulation and surveillance, who joined the Big Board in 1961.

Of the 31 others in middle management and higher who were dismissed, six were assistant vice presidents. Their names and departments are: James K. C. Dorn, stock list; Simon Krauthamer, market surveillance; Gerald Slotnick, systems services; Everett K. Hicks, corporate liaison and new business; Donald Cummings, market procedures, and Robert Levine, enforcement.

William M. Batten, chairman of the exchange, said that the organizational changes were designed to provide "a better-integrated, more streamlined structure." This grouping of like functions that the Cresap study recommended had been started during the chairmanship of James J. Needham and now is being broadened.

The major structural change is the dissolution of the market operations and membership services department. A marketing division was established to encompass all functions dealing with new listings, new products and day-to-day communications with listed companies.

Exchange officials anticipate that the staff reduction will enable the organization to operate efficiently through the end of next year without additional dismissals. A placement firm that specializes in the "outplacement" of dismissed executives—Orr, Cuthrell, Fuchs and Associates—was retained by the Big Board to help its management-level employees find new jobs.

I.R.S. Challenges Faculty Tuition Benefit

By FREDERICK ANDREWS

The big man on campus these days may be the Internal Revenue agent.

After years of neglecting tax-exempt colleges and universities to concentrate its audit forces on more lucrative individual and corporate tax returns, the Internal Revenue Service has dispatched agents to hundreds of campuses across the nation. The most immediate result has been to touch a tender nerve on campus by challenging free tuition for faculty children, a time-honored benefit.

In interviews, university financial officers traced the unusual wave of I.R.S. audits to the 1969 Tax Reform Act, which stimulated the revenue service's interest in tax-exempt institutions generally. After an intensive round of auditing private foundations, the I.R.S. turned to other tax-exempt groups—with private colleges and universities in the forefront, school fficials said.

"I find it difficult now to find a college or university that hasn't been audited," said John Holt Myers, a Washington lawyer who represents numerous institutions. "Three years ago, it was hard to find one that had."

For its part, the I.R.S. says the campuses are feeling the same heat as other tax-exempt groups. A spokesman explained the wave of admittedly tough audits of colleges as part of a broad program begun in 1974 to gauge compliance by exempt organizations. It included auditing every institution having $30 million in assets.

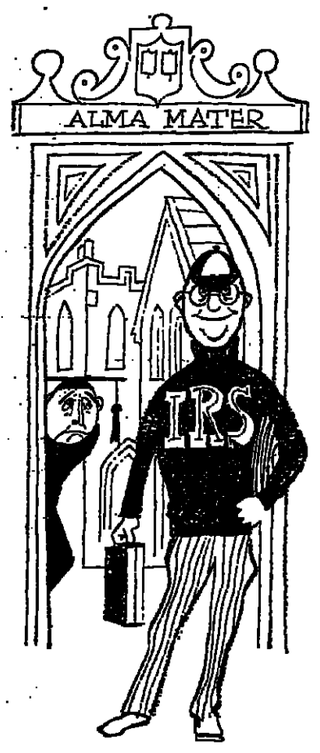
According to school administrators, the I.R.S. auditors have challenged matters ranging from discrimination in admissions to the institutions' income from outside sources, such as industry financed drug testing at university medical centers.

The most controversial—and apparently the most common—audit dispute has centered on tuition remission, or free tuition for faculty dependents, currently under challenge at about 100 institutions, Mr. Myers estimated. He said the I.R.S. first raised the issue five years ago but then backed off.

Now the revenue service is taking formal steps to require college teachers and other staff members to pay taxes on the tuition benefit. Under a proposed regulation issued Nov. 2, tuition paid or remitted by an institution for any employee's dependents would be deemed compensation for the employee's services unless the award were shown to be a bona fide scholarship.

If adopted as proposed, the regulation would not apply to tuition paid or remitted before Nov. 2, or affect free tuition already promised for this school year.

Though word of the new pronouncement is only now spreading through university circles, their professional organizations predict an outpouring of protests. "This is an extremely high-priority item. It will gravely concern a lot of people," said Rachel Lowder of the National Association of College and University Business Officers in a telephone interview from Washington. The group has 1,600 members, covering roughly half of the nation's accredited institutions of higher learning.



Robert Shore

Private colleges and universities contend they are already beset by a severe financial squeeze. "Why now?" asked Roy O. Kallenberger, vice president for business and finance of Marquette University in Milwaukee. "With all the independent institutions are going

Alaska Selling Gas To Three Companies

By STEVEN RATTNER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—The State of Alaska announced today that it will sell its share of natural gas production from the North Slope to three companies that will transport it to the lower 48 states and resell it, beginning in 1982.

Fifty percent was allocated to the Tennessee Gas Transmission Company, a subsidiary of Tenneco Inc., and 25 percent each to El Paso Alaska, a subsidiary of the El Paso Natural Gas Company, and the Southern Natural Gas Company, a subsidiary of Southern Natural Resources Inc.

Under royalty provisions connected with the North Slope exploration, the State of Alaska is entitled to an eighth of all production but, because the state has no transmission or marketing apparatus, it has long been expected to sell its share at the wellhead to established companies, of which the three chosen today are among the largest.

Alaska's share will total an estimated 3.25 to 3.75 trillion cubic feet over the

Sprague's Surprising Turnaround

By ROBERT METZ

The General Cable Corporation's premium bid for the Sprague Electric Company, announced after the close of trading last Friday, powered Sprague shares to a 6¾ point gain yesterday at 19⅝.

The shares traded as high as 19¾ on a 309,600-share turnover to become the second most active stock on the New York Stock Exchange.

The action brought moans from brokers and investers who regarded the company as a takeover candidate some time ago and then lost interest after an unsuccessful attempt to merge Sprague, a maker of electrical and electronic circuit parts and semiconductors, with the Cabot Corporation of Boston.

When those talks were broken off last May, Neal W. Welch, president and chairman of Sprague, said the company did not want to be acquired by anyone.

Mr. Welch has clearly changed his mind. The announcement from General Cable's Greenwich, Conn., headquarters carried the endorsement of Mr. Welch, who termed the offer of $19.50 a share a fair one and added that the insider holdings, amounting to about 18 percent of Sprague's 3.5 million shares, would be tendered.

One broker who looked at Sprague's high book value of $15.83 in December 1974 and bought the shares at 5⅝ for a quick profit said that Sprague was only one of 15 companies he then regarded as takeover candidates. Ironically, he owned General Cable yesterday—not Sprague—and thus missed the big action.

General Cable, which makes wire and cable products, was clearly pleased that its bid was acceptable to management, and little wonder. Last year, a surprise bid for Microdot Inc., a producer of ingot molds, electrical connectors and specialty fasteners, brought General Cable no end of trouble as Microdot mobilized a highly professional and costly effort to avoid General Cable's welcoming arms.

General Cable spent heavily to win its prize but lost out to Northwest Industries, which offered $21 a share for Microdot, or $4 a share more than General Cable was willing to pay.

In the current instance, General Cable has not only obtained cooperation from its target but also has paid a price well above the premium it offered for Microdot.

General Cable closed at 10⅛ yesterday, up ¼, on a 26,600-share turnover.

Dennis G. Little, vice president and treasurer of General Cable, noted that the working capital of Sprague was equal to $21.66 a share and it had a book value of $17.62 a share on Sept. 30. Sprague also owns 40 percent of Mostek, a semiconductor producer.

Few research organizations follow Sprague, which has been plagued with losses for years due to inefficient production facilities. But in a report dated Aug. 20, when Sprague was selling at 14, the Value Line Investment Survey said that Sprague offered "hefty" capital gains potential for the aggressive investor. The advisory service noted that the then current market value of the Mostek investment was about $10 a Sprague share.

"With more than 70 percent of Sprague's market price represented by the equity in Mostek, we consider Sprague shares undervalued," it said.

Value Line also traced Sprague's long battle with deficits, calling it the result of an inefficient manufacturing base.

Some observers believe that Sp is typical of many companies w assets are more valuable than the ket price of its stock reflects. era of fewer and fewer stock ana such companies get little atte from Wall Street.

Thus, when a company manag turn itself around, the news some comes as a surprise. The improve began for Sprague in 1974, whe company began a sweeping cost-r tion program.

There were plant consolidation stallation of automated assembly to reduce the relative labor com sales and the development of an grated production base to reduce of raw materials.

"Management has succeede lowering the sales breakeven through its productivity efforts," Line said. The advisory servic dicted Sprague would earn $ share in 1976 in contrast to a in 1975.

the rest of November to get back to normal levels.

The General Motors Corporation and the Chrysler Corporation reported what analysts saw as only modest sales gains, in the 4-to-5-percent range, this month, while the American Motors Corporation, which cut Gremlin prices by $253 Nov. 4, reported a 31 percent decline.

One auto-company analyst said: "The industry has been basically flat for months now. The Big Three firms have had generally excellent reception for their big cars but offsetting this is the drag on the market by slow subcompact car sales."

An independent analyst, Arvid Jouppi, of Detroit, said: "Right now, you are seeing the strike effect and some uncertainty in the economy—not weak, but uncertain because of the election.

"People are not confident that their situation is going to be good. It seems to be that the first requirement of President-elect Carter will be to persuade Detroit and other industries that business conditions are going to continue strong."

Mr. Jouppi said the auto market "is not quite flat yet." "I think imports will continue at their 1.5 million annual level and domestic sales will go up slightly to 9.0 million in 1977," he said. "But the peak will come about midyear, after which there will be some slippage to 8.1 million in 1978, with no upturn until some time in 1979."

R. K. Brown, executive vice president for North American automotive operations at Chrysler, agreed with Mr. Jouppi that some of the softness in the market now "is partly the result of the election." "But I think we will get all this behind us and with some positive indication of where Mr. Carter stands, we will see a darn good year in 1977," he added.

"And I don't think I'm just talking to myself. You have to be objective. It's much too early to write off 1977 as anything but a very good year."

But Chrysler is cutting back production of its compact-size Plymouth Volare and Dodge Aspen cars to keep inventories, now at an 80-day level, from getting out of hand.

Following are sales reported by the four United States auto companies for the Nov. 1-10 period:

How to Avoid Mismanaging Your Own Money

A guide to Financial Planning for people who are uneasy about managing their finances, or too busy, or both...from U.S. Trust.

A surprising number of people who are geniuses at making money for themselves or their corporations have self-confessed limitations when it comes to planning the use of their own money.

U.S.Trust is a world leader in financial planning. We are responsible for $10 billion in other people's assets.

Below you'll find some of what we've learned over 123 years. And what we know, up-to-date, about the new Tax Reform Act of 1976.

Read carefully. The money you rescue will be your own.

you have trouble with these stions, you are in definite need financial planning help.

If I own my own business, what t worth?

Am I overinsured? Underin- d?

Do I have good advisors? For s? For investments? Insurance? legal matters? Do they give me licting advice?

Understand How To Use A Financial Planner.

If you were really worried about your health, you'd see your family doctor. But you probably wouldn't stop there. You'd go to a clinic for a thorough checkup by a team of specialists.

So it should be with your financial life.

Personal financial planning at U. S. Trust is nothing less than the meticulous, painstaking examination of your financial health, followed by thorough diagnosis, and, where necessary, treatment.

Systematic financial planning is a relatively new discipline. Few people, even those who need it most, have taken advantage of it.

U. S. Trust has been a pioneer and innovator in personal financial planning.

We look at every pertinent aspect of your financial past, present and future. Your financial affairs are sifted and analyzed by a team of specialists put together as your situation dictates. The team includes tax experts, investment analysts, trust officers, real estate experts, insurance analysts, estate and will specialists, bankers, accountants, closely held business experts. And your attorney.

But only one person, your Financial Planner, will coordinate the effort. He can become your confidant, advisor, captive expert, even godfather to your children.

Let your Planner help you make business decisions. The financial decisions you make are only as good as your information. You can count on U. S. Trust to dig it out.

For instance, one of our customers went ahead on his own to buy a business. He was about to sign the papers when he decided a quick call to us might be prudent.

Our research department discovered the owners of the business had represented its value to be much higher than it actually was.

Our client backed out of the deal. The business went bankrupt.

You can trust a Planner to be objective. He's not selling you anything. A planner does not sell insurance or make commissions on your stock trades. He earns a set fee whether he saves you a million dollars or a thousand. Nor does he create problems so he can sell you more advice. If he finds you shipshape, he'll say so.

If you own and operate your own business, a planner can help. Chances are your life's blood is in your business. And your family income depends mightily on continued success.

If you're over fifty, you've begun to wonder: Can I keep the business in the family? Can one of my children run it? Do I have a successor for myself? Or should I merge my company? Or sell it?

You are entering a delicate time when you must shift some of your eggs out of your one precious basket. U. S. Trust can help. We can find a way to give you cash for retirement even if you want to keep the business in the family. Or help find a merger partner or buyer.

Make an Investment Plan that Looks Far, Far Ahead

There are four main objectives to a long-term investment plan: (1) Protect your money and its buying power; (2) Make your money grow; (3) Get income from it; (4) Minimize taxes.

You must decide what you want your investments to do, and it isn't easy. The more you want your money to grow, the more willing you must be to take risks.

Reduce risk through diversity. The only sensible way to strike a balance between safety and risk is to diversify. The tough part is knowing how, when and where to diversify. This is where you need professional help. A U. S. Trust Financial Planner can draw on U. S. Trust specialists in economics, investment research and portfolio management.

Which investment categories should you consider for diversification? Stocks? Bonds? Short-term investments (such as Treasury Bills)? Real estate? Commodities? Options? Are you interested in investments with an added ownership reward: antiques, art, jewelry, stamps, coins, etc.? To what degree should you tie up your money in illiquid investments?

U. S. Trust has scores of investment executives and portfolio managers to help you with securities. We have a staff of real estate experts. And we can put you in touch with expert advisors, appraisers and the best dealers in the art world.

An Investment For Safety that Backfired

Before he came to us, one U. S. Trust customer had invested all of his assets in bonds because they were "safe."

Our first and most unpleasant task was to show him he was worth considerably less on paper than he thought, because of the bonds he had picked and his market timing. We helped him to restructure his portfolio and ease the loss through a technique called "Aggregate Unit Trading."

Defend Against Taxes

Congress just enacted the most sweeping changes in estate and gift tax law in 35 years.

Even so, do not overreact to taxes.

A tax plan should not be drawn until after you have decided what you want to do with your money. Who you want to share it with while you live. Who you want to leave it to after you die. Follow your natural inclinations, for they tend to stand the test of time.

Then and only then are you ready to work on avoiding taxes. Here's how:

1. Work with a tax advisor, like U. S. Trust, who keeps things in perspective, who knows the tax rules and stays abreast of changes, who knows how to use them to your advantage. The wealthier you are, the more the new tax rules may hurt you. You've never needed expert advice more than now.

2. Cut taxes by using trusts. Trusts come in all shapes and sizes. Even under the new rules, they remain a vital tool. Used correctly, they can reduce your current taxes, or the tax bite on your heirs.

3. Use the "marital deduction." The Tax Reform Act of 1976 has actually increased the amount of the marital deduction in some cases. But beware. The new rules may also require precise new wording in your will if the expanded deduction is to be realized. See your lawyer.

4. If you work for a corporation, include corporate benefits in your planning. Your group life insurance, stock options, bonus plans and other company benefits are an integral part of your estate and should be considered as such. A Financial Planner can help you make maximum use of corporate benefits, tell you how to invest bonuses to build capital and avoid taxes, tell you when to exercise stock options, and what profit-sharing plan elections to use to cut taxes through a shifting of funds. The new law has a great impact on company benefits.

5. Beware the jointly owned property trap. Jointly owned property taxes have been somewhat liberalized, provided certain very specific requirements are met. The requirements differ according to the type of property. It's tricky. You should get advice.

Please Don't Die Without a Will

Unless you want the State to distribute your money. If you cannot think of dying, let U. S. Trust do this unpleasant thinking for you, together with your lawyer.

Check your will every time your life changes. When your family life or career changes, so does your financial life. New job, new location, birth of children.

The new tax law may require changes in your will. Our Financial Planners will review your will as a first, basic step. With your lawyer, we will help determine any changes your will needs.

Don't name a relative or friend as sole executor. You need a professional. A permanent fixture. A skilled investor, with a knowledge of taxes, a precise record keeper, an executor who is accountable in a businesslike way.

These are not characteristics friends and relatives often possess. Uncle George may be the pillar of the family today, but will he be ten years from now? Even highly qualified individual executors can't promise to be available and capable tomorrow. U. S. Trust can.

The appointment of a trustee is one of the most important decisions a family can make. The decisions your trustee makes will influence your family for years and years to come. At U.S. Trust, we are prepared to act as your Financial Planner, your investment manager, your executor, and your trustee.

Your choice of a trustee can have great impact on future tax payments. Under the new tax rules, the death of a trust beneficiary may result in estate taxes where none was due before. But the amount may not be known for decades. So you will need an expert trustee backed by a highly sophisticated organization, which can keep meticulous track of your affairs through the years. U.S.Trust can do this for you. We'll be here for generations into the future.

Beware the trust company that isn't a trust company. Almost every commercial bank has a trust department. But trust business is usually only a sideline.

Lending money is the main business of most banks.

At U. S. Trust, the management of money has been our main business since 1853.

U. S. Trust is one of the few institutions in America where comprehensive trust and investment services are all under one roof. From overall Financial Planners and investment specialists to the nation's most experienced trust and estate experts.

How The New Tax Law May Hurt You And What To Do About It

Where it Hurts

1. The $30,000 tax-free "lifetime gift" will be eliminated on Jan. 1. It may make sense to give it now if you haven't already.

2. Investors will pay higher taxes on sales of stock, real estate, other property.

3. Incremental tax rates on large estates could run to 90% in some states where there are State and Federal death taxes.

4. Much of the 25% tax benefit on gifts will disappear.

5. After Dec. 31, any gift made within three years of death will be taxed fully as part of your estate.

6. The value of inherited stocks and bonds will be eaten into. Ten years from now, the moderately rich will feel the bite and the very rich will be very bitten.

7. Sales of inherited real estate, closely held businesses, jewelry will be taxed more. The closer it was acquired to Jan. 1, '77, and the later it is sold after Jan. 1, the higher the tax on any increase in value.

8. The tax on capital gains will rise substantially.

9. Rules on tax shelters have changed. Get expert advice.

10. Property will have to be held twice as long to become long-term capital gains. For over a year by 1978.

11. Qualified stock options for executives are dying. Other rewards must be found for key employees.

12. Beneficiaries of executives may lose tax exemption on company benefits. One lump-sum payment versus many annuity installments must be examined before a payment choice is made.

13. Trusts over $250,000 may have to be restructured. But not until 1981. Even after that, trusts will still be the best vehicle for transferring money from generation to generation.

What to Do

1. Review your will. But don't rewrite without expert help.

2. Plan far ahead. Some of the screws won't tighten for five, ten, twenty years.

3. Appoint an executor and a trustee backed by a permanent institution, to help your family deal with the new taxes till your grandchildren are in their eighties.

4. Rework your gift plan. Gifting is still a way to lighten tax burden. The $3000-a-year ($6000 including spouse) exclusion is still available.

5. Give $30,000 (or $60,000 with spouse) before Jan. 1, if you haven't already used your lifetime exemption. After Dec. 31 it's not tax free.

6. Create trusts for your grandchildren. Different trusts for different generations may reduce taxes.

7. Use "Family Trusts." There are now advantages to combining in one trust all the property passing to your children.

8. Be careful about naming children trustees in trusts over $250,000. The estate tax implications may be severe.

9. Consider more life insurance to cover added taxes.

10. Executives: take full advantage of pension and profit-sharing plans. But reassess lump sum versus annuity payments. There may be tax consequences.

ed-Income Prices Rise on Eve of Heavy Financing

By JOHN H. ALLAN

income securities prices advanced ely yesterday as the credit readied themselves for the ex- arily active schedule of financing one this week. The Federal Re- judged short-term interest rates down a little, giving the market a semblance of op- it timism to handle the $13 ets billion of all types of debt securities scheduled for sale during the week. For much lay, however, investment bankers to get ready for the volume of tes and bonds that will hit the this morning in a parade that ntinue through Thursday. The of foreign issues for sale is the this year, while the volume of mpt bonds is second largest. "he deals don't go well, prices down," one municipal bond dealer ed, voicing a view that was wide- throughout the marketplace.

Australian Bond Issue Priced

first major financing to be priced ustralia's $200 million of bonds, of $125 million of bonds matur- 1983 and $75 million coming due The short-term issue was given percent interest rate yesterday percent of face value to yield rcent to maturity. The 1996 ma- was priced as 9's at 99½ to yield percent.

issues are rated triple-A by 's and Standard & Poor's. The shorter-term notes are nonredeemable for six of their seven years and the longer-term bonds for 15 of their 20 years, except for sinking-fund purposes. The sinking fund begins in 1982 and retires 93 percent of the issue prior to maturity, giving it an average life of 13 years.

Morgan Stanley & Company heads the group underwriting the two issues, the second Australian Government financing this year. The money will be loaned to Australian states to help finance internal capital projects.

Australia on May 20 borrowed $200 million. In that financing, it sold five-year bonds priced to yield 8.25 percent, 10-year bonds yielding 8.80 percent and 20-year bonds yielding 9.29 percent.

The $400 million total is the largest package this year of securities sold by foreign issuers through offerings registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

While the credit markets worked to prepare this week's offerings, a substantial volume of new corporate issues was registered with the S.E.C. for sale probably in early December. Some investment bankers have reported that the corporate clients want to complete their financing before Jimmy Carter is inaugurated on Jan. 20, and that may help account for the substantial volume of bonds registered over the last few days.

Yesterday, the Transamerica Corporation filed $50 million of 25-year debentures to be sold by a Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith syndicate. Braniff Airways registered $50 million of debentures, due 1997, to be sold by Goldman, Sachs & Company and its associates.

The Republic New York Corporation, a holding company that owns the Republic National Bank of New York, registered $50 million of 25-year debentures. Salomon Brothers is managing the offering.

Miles Laboratories announced plans to sell $40 million of 20-year debentures through a White, Weld & Company underwriting syndicate.

In the Federal agency sector of the credit markets, the Banks for Cooperatives and the Intermediate Credit Banks—two farmer-owned banking systems that provide credit for agribusiness—announced plans to sell tomorrow almost $1.45 billion of short-term bonds to refinance all but $121.5 million of $1.57 billion of securities maturing shortly. Farmers usually pay off some debt at this time of year.

The Banks for Cooperatives will sell $582.3 million of six-month bonds and the Intermediate Credit Banks will sell $864.5 million of nine-month bonds. Terms will be set this afternoon, and the securities will be offered through a nationwide network of banks and dealers and Aubrey K. Johnson, fiscal agent.

American Distilling Seeks Schenley

By HERBERT KOSHETZ

The American Distilling Company announced yesterday that it had been holding exploratory discussions with the Rapid-American Corporation to acquire Rapid's Schenley Industries subsidiary for a $355 million package of cash and notes.

Merger News

Meshulim Riklis, chairman of Rapid-American, said that there had been several inquiries, including that of American Distilling, for Schenley and that Rapid American would consider all the proposals.

Schenley is the second property that Rapid-American is seeking to dispose of to consolidate its financial position. Late last year, the company sold its International Playtex division to Esmark Inc. for $210 million in cash, notes and preferred stock and reduced its bank debt by $150 million.

Schenley, with sales of more than $785 million, accounts for about 35 percent of Rapid-American's total sales. It is second to the McCrory Corporation as a Rapid-American revenue producer.

Schenley, which distributes Dewar's White Label Scotch whisky, Old Charter and Ancient Age and I. W. Harper bourbon whiskies, and Mateus wine and other brands of alcoholic beverages, is the fourth largest maker and distributor of alcoholic beverages in the country after the Seagram Company, Heublein Inc., and Hiram-Walker-Gooderman & Worts Inc.

American Distilling, a much smaller distiller, lost $5.48 million in 1975 on sales of $141.4 million. Its brands include Bourbon Supreme, Stillbrook, Old American, Meadwood and Pennypacker bourbon whiskies, Tovarisch and Tvarsicki vodkas, King James Scotch and Canadian Host whisky.

Mr. Riklis said that all operations of the retail, manufacturing and distributing divisions and subsidiaries of Rapid-American were continuing on a satisfactory level with results in the third quarter estimated to produce an after-tax profit.

Rapid-American estimates that its net income for the year will be $8 million to $10 million. In the year to Jan. 31, 1976, it reported a deficit of $9.44 million on sales of $2.29 billion.

eedham Discusses His Views Since Leaving Big Board

st Friday morning, James J. ham joined a dozen other busi- executives, labor leaders and rnment officials for a meeting of Capital and Technology Commit- m Vice President Rockefeller's conference room in Wash- ington. Mr. Needham's ap- he pointment to this Govern- nomic ment-advisory group is the one new outside assignment that the former chairman e New York Stock Exchange has since his forced resignation from restigious Wall Street post more six months ago. He remains a ultant to the exchange.

e committee is headed by Donald rnham, a director and former man of the Westinghouse Electric oration. It was established last st as a subcommittee of the Na- l Center for Productivity and the ity of Working Life, which was set y Congress last year.

ith a new Administration coming ashington in January, however, it t be a short-lived affiliation for Needham and some of his col- ues on the committee, whose task search for the means to im- the competitiveness of American ess.

a recent discussion, his first formal view since he left his Big Board last May, Mr. Needham indicated faction with the nonpaying Gov- ental appointment, but he ex- ed eagerness to become more ac- in the business world, in Govern- , in a trade association or in some executive capacity in this country ewhere.

was apparent that no appealing rtunities had come his way so far d he is becoming restive for some ningful involvement. The most at- ive, he said, would be several cor- te directorships, such as those ass- d by his two immediate predeces- at the helm of the nation's largest k exchange—Robert W. Haack and eith Funston. Mr. Needham is now ssing a few possible board posi- s in industry.

nother possibility, though low on ist of priorities, would be a return high position with one of the major unting firms. That field had been springboard to national prominence.

The New York Times

James J. Needham

He had been the New York partner of a Greensboro, N. C., accounting firm in 1969, when he was named one of the five members of the Securities and Exchange Commission. After three years there, he was selected as Mr. Haack's successor at the Big Board.

When he was suddenly removed from that position last spring because the Big Board's governors wanted some one less controversial for the new era dawning for the nation's securities business, Mr. Needham's first inclination was to seek a "less visible" position.

"I had seven years of high visibility," he said, "and I wanted to get away from things like Congressional testimony on tax legislation, securities industry matters and involvement in such things as the New York financial crisis. But, after six months, I've changed my thinking. Now I realize I can live with that kind of involvement."

In the meantime, Mr. Needham has been quietly fulfilling his lifetime consulting contract with the Big Board and biding his time. Except for occasional trips abroad—to Stockholm for a meeting of the International Chamber of Commerce and to the Far East for a conference of the world's leading stock exchanges—he has been appearing almost daily at a new office on the 18th floor of the New York exchange.

Under his contract with the Big Board, the terms of which he refuses to discuss, there are only a few types of jobs from which he is barred. He cannot become an officer or a director of any other stock exchange or commodity market. And he can't become associated with any broker-dealer or a firm that gives investment advice unless it is a member of the New York Stock Exchange. There have been reports that the exchange will pay him between $300,000 and $400,000 for the remaining year and a half on his uncompleted term as chairman.

One possibility is coming up soon. Mr. Needham is scheduled to talk with a research committee seeking to fill a top post at a leading university.

While the 50-year-old native New Yorker, who worked his way up from a part-time job as a messenger at a major bank to high estate in business, Government and Wall Street, obviously is eager to become active again, he does not express any bitterness over the events that short-circuited his career at the Big Board.

"I never thought the exchange was a place I could stay for the rest of my life," he said. "The nature of that job made too many decisions unpopular among a membership of such diverse interests —decisions that were made not only by myself but by the board of governors. Communication was the big problem."

How does he feel now about his battles with Government agencies and others over some of his controversial positions while heading the nation's largest securities market?

"I guess," Mr. Needham said calmly, "the big thing I learned was that, once public opinion goes against a certain decision, you should take a hard look at your position and see how you can accommodate to the change."

Mr. Needham's biggest mistake, his critics say, was his intransigence in battling the moves by the S.E.C. and the Congress to modernize securities trading —the move from fixed commissions to negotiated rates, curbs on specialists on the floor of the exchange, the effort to create a central market and recognition of the third market.

What does he see ahead for the securities business?

"The banks," Mr. Needham said, "will probably take a more important role in the securities business if the laws are changed. In certain areas, there will be a big confrontation unless the banks decide they don't want to underwrite corporate bonds and equities publicly."

Does he think the two major New York exchanges will ever be fully merged?

"For political reasons," he said, "I don't think that will happen very soon. There would have to be a more accommodative view by the antitrust people and the Congress. But the biggest single obstacle to such a merger was the opposition of the seatholders. A seatholder is really a partner, and he wants to hold on to his position. Privately, I always thought it be advantageous to achieve such a merger."

What's the next step?

"Now that clearance facilities are being merged here," he replied, "the next thing will be international clearance. One exchange in Europe has already asked the S.E.C. about coming under the commission's regulations so that its members can participate in clearances and settlement of trading by wire rather than physical delivery of securities.

The former Big Board chairman said he believed there was need for more automation at the exchanges in this country. And, he added, the securities industry "should recognize it has a very short time to reorganize and, therefore, unify behind the chairman of the New York Stock Exchange. He ended the interview on a nate that indicated he still strong objects to Government intrusion into Wall Street's business.

He ended the interview on a note that indicated he still strongly objects to Government intrusion into Wall Street's business.

"It is time for the exchanges," Mr. Needham said, "to get together and keep the Government out of it. The S.E.C. is great at giving a sense of direction and great at reacting, perhaps more than it would want to do. But it is not great at implementing change. They don't have the time and the people to do that job. And they can't sit down and design specifications for tasks to be done. The commission probably prefers that the industry keep that role."

ALASKA SELLING GAS TO THREE COMPANIES

20 years of the agreement and today's sale represented 2.6 trillion cubic feet with an estimated market value of $3.7 billion. Details of the price agreement were not disclosed.

However, it is expected that the gas might be sold slightly below the allowable maximum price of the Federal Power Commission because of the additional transportation cost. Alaska expects to use the remainder of its share within the state.

Most knowledgeable observers were not surprised by today's decision to allocate the gas among three companies because Guy R. Martin, the state's Commissioner of Natural Resources, hinted about a month ago that three buyers —and particularly Tenneco—would be able to elicit more support here for a proposed Alaskan natural gas pipeline, the route of which is still unresolved.

Both Tenneco and Southern have indicated that they favor and would utilize a pipeline proposed by El Paso to carry the gas across Alaska from Prudhoe Bay to Valdez, where it would be liquefied and shipped to the West Coast by tanker. There it would be regasified and pumped

The other two proposals for pipelines, which would traverse Canada, were made by companies that will have no interest in Alaska's royalty gas.

The decision announced today by Alaska's Governor, Jay Hammond, is conditional on approval by the Alaska Royalty Board, which meets next Monday, and by the Legislature, which convenes in January.

Mr. Hammond said that the companies offered no premium price or front money and that the state had obtained certan rights to recall the gas if markets for it develop in Alaska.

The deal is also conditional on approval being obtained for one of the three pipeline proposals currently under consideration by the F.P.C. President Ford recently signed a bill that will ostensibly provide a more rapid mechanism for selecting a route for the new gas pipeline. Nonetheless, few observers expect the natural gas, which is expected to reach 2 billion cubic feet a day, to begin flowing before 1980.

$8 Million Is Paid To Addressograph By Xerox in Accord

By WILLIAM D. SMITH

The Xerox Corporation yesterday paid $8 million to the Addressograph-Multigraph Corporation as part of a settlement of counter claims between the two companies involving alleged monopolistic practices and patent infringement in the office copier and duplicating industry.

It was the second such settlement in less than a week by Xerox. On Thursday the Stamford, Conn. office copier and duplicator maker, paid $2 million to the Dennison Manufacturing Company to settle litigation that began in 1967.

The Addressograph agreement did not involve litigation but came after negotiations that began last March. Part of the agreement involved transfer of patents and technical information.

Neither company would elaborate on the settlement. A Xerox spokesman acknowledged the company was involved in other patent infringement and antitrust actions but said that on legal advice he was unable to disclose names of the companies involved.

One of the companies involved in litigation with Xerox is the International Business Machines Corporation. Another is the SCM Corporation. A trial date in June has been set for the SCM action.

Over the last 10 years Xerox has filed several patent-infringement suits against competitors in the copier market. The other companies responded with suits charging Xerox with monopoly or misuse of patents.

In April, 1975, Xerox settled its 1972 patent infringement suit against Litton Industries Inc., which had countered with a monopoly charge.

The two companies exchange patent licenses and Litton paid Xerox $1 million for rights to three patents and immunity from patent litigation concerning the copiers Litton was marketing. Xerox, however, paid Litton $12.6 million for licenses to patents that had nothing to do with copiers.

In July, 1975, the Federal Trade Commission concluded an agreement on terms of a consent order settling an F.T.C. antitrust complaint against Xerox. Among other things Xerox agreed to liberalize the licensing of its patents and to its claims of patent infringement against companies making cross-licensing agreements under the order.

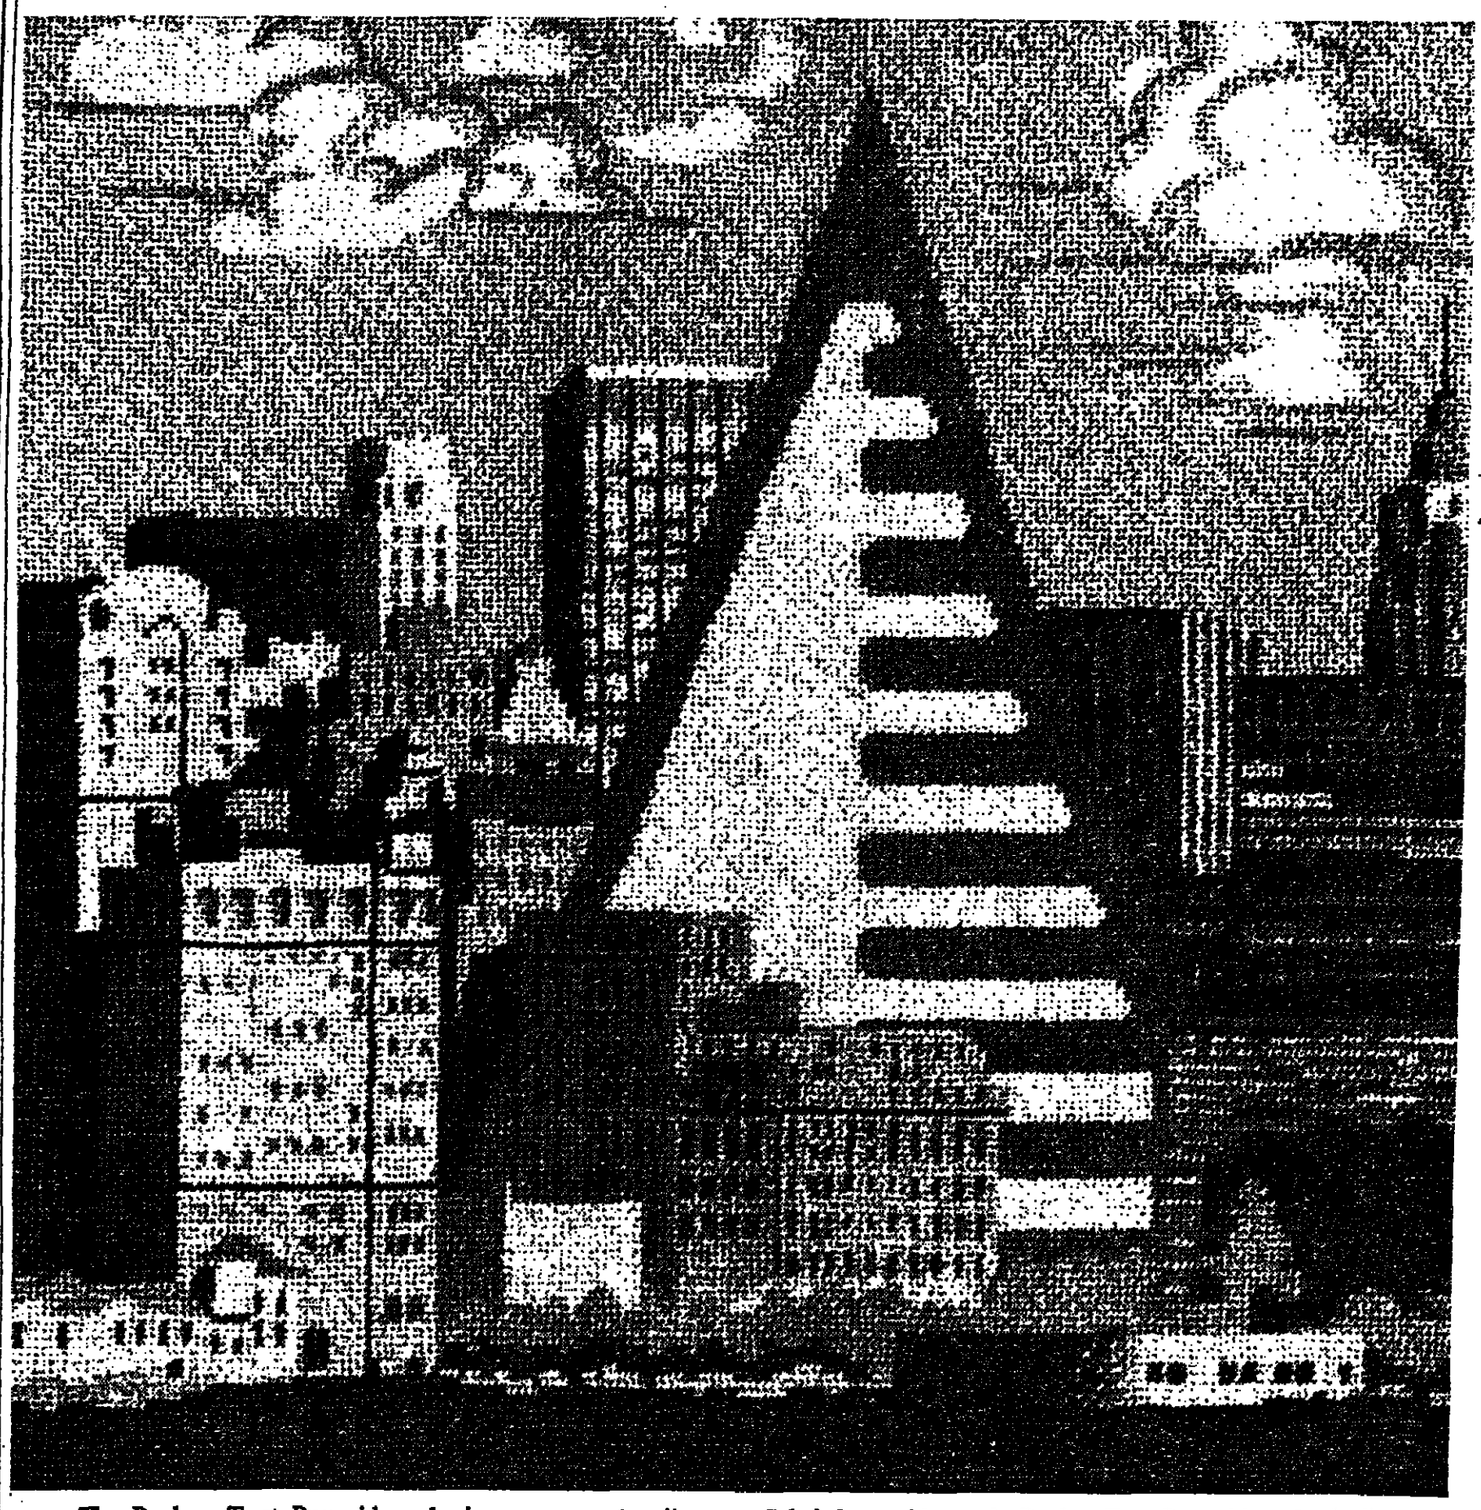
For 40 years, factoring at the Pyramid has kept one New York company in stitches.



The Bankers Trust Pyramid, embroidered above, is an example of the kind of work they do.

As one of the nation's largest stitchery companies, they've learned that factoring with us can help them grow—not only by providing cash—but by increasing their liquidity and by taking the worry and expense out of running their own credit department, with all the staff and credit agency contracts that entails.

Factoring with Bankers Trust can help many companies expand their base with present customers and offer services which those companies simply don't have, like sales analyses and customer histories of returns and allowances.

Our staff of credit experts specialize in various industries and know your business. In fact, we can often tailor-make a complete financial package to suit your needs.

But factoring is only one example of how we can serve you. Wherever you see the Bankers Trust Pyramid, you're dealing with a full service bank in the fullest sense of the word, with the capacity to raise, lend and manage money worldwide.

A visit to the Pyramid can be a rewarding experience.

Price of Gold Shows a Sharp Rise

LONDON, Nov. 15 (AP)—The price of gold went up sharply in the major bullion markets today, hitting its highest point in London since the beginning of the year to close at $139.50 an ounce. Dealers said investors in the United States and the Far East were buying gold.

The price of gold in London jumped by $3.75 to close at $139.50 an ounce, about $36.50 above the low point this year. The 1976 high was $140.50 on Jan. 2.

The dollar made fractional gains against most European currencies, but fell back in London, where talk of new government measures to stiffen the economy sent up the value of the pound by more than 1½ cents.

In Zurich, the major European bullion market, gold went up $3.50 to close at $139 an ounce. In Milan, gold was $5.25 higher at $141.25.

Gold prices have been rising consistently for the last three weeks and dealers said they thought the price was heading toward $140 to $145 an ounce; they said that buyers at present seemed unperturbed by the auction announced for Dec. 8 of another 780,000 ounces of gold by the International Monetary fund.

The auction, to set up a store of cash to aid developing countries, will be the fifth held by the fund. Gold prices dipped around the world prior to the last two auctions because of fears that there would be too much gold for sale.

Now there seems to be more confidence. Dealers said that investors in the United States were getting out of currencies and into gold because they feared a new bout of inflation following expected easier monetary and fiscal policies by the incoming Carter administration.

In Frankfurt, the dollar closed at 2.4192 West German marks, a slight gain over Friday's closing 2.4135. In Paris, the dollar closed at 4.9820 French francs, down from 4.9825.

In Zurich, the dollar closed at 2.4424 Swiss francs, up from 2.4401, and in Amsterdam the closing price was 2.5315 Dutch guilders, up from 2.5265. The dollar was fixed in Milan at 865.45 Italian lire, up from 865.35.

The British pound gained 1.58 cents against the dollar to close at $1.6410 from Friday's $1.6260. Dealers said the pound was in demand by West German banks.

Car-Rental Units Studied by F.T.C. Over Allowances

The Federal Trade Commission said yesterday that it had begun an investigation to determine whether certain promotional allowances paid by the Big Three automakers to auto-rental companies were discriminatory.

This follows on an investigation last spring by the F.T.C. into possible monopoly practices of the three largest rental concerns in controlling the car-rental business at airports. Last July the Hertz Corporation, Avis Rent-A-Car System Inc. and National Car Rental Systems Inc. signed consent agreements that provided they would not conspire to dominate the rental business or fix prices anywhere in the United States. In signing the consent decrees, the three companies did not admit or deny the charges.

At the time Reuben Robertson, of Washington, D.C., a lawyer associated with the Ralph Nader consumer group, protested that the decree did not go far enough and urged further investigation into the advertising allowances paid by the major automakers to the car-rental companies.

For example, Mr. Robertson said that Hertz had an agreement with the Ford Motor Company, whose cars it uses, for Ford to provide up to $10 million yearly for advertising that would promote not only Hertz but the Ford name as well. He said that the Chrysler Corporation had a similar agreement with Avis, which uses a large number of Chrysler cars.

Study on Korean Apparel Exports

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15 (AP)—The Treasury Department announced today that it had begun a formal investigation into whether leather apparel from South Korea was being exported to the United States with the help of bounties or grants. If the Treasury Department does find that the Korean Government is subsidizing the apparel, it is required to impose a special duty equal to the subsidies being granted manufacturers or exporters.

Penn-Dixie Industries Is Charged With Fraud

Penn-Dixie Industries and its chairman, Jerome Castle, have been accused of fraudulently causing the company to pay to much for some Florida real estate, the Securities and Exchange Commission announced.

The agenc aid that Mr. Castle and Arnold Y. Aronoff caused Penn-Dixie to buy 5,500 acreas of what the S.E.C. called "primarily swampland" in Putnam County, Fla. The purchase was made for $6 million through the Aronoff Trust, which had purchased it for $5.8 million the day before, the S.E.C. charged.

Mr. Castle and the company were also accused of filing false reports about the takeover of Diversified Industries of Clayton, Mo., two years ago.

Commodities Down, Except for Wheat, On Soybean Slump

CHICAGO, Nov. 15 (AP)—Soybean futures fell more than 23 cents a bushel on the Chicago Board of Trade today and, except for wheat, dragged most of the other commodities lower.

Wheat futures were up 6 cents under a good, independent demand. Soybean oil fell the limit of 100 points while soybean meal lost $3.50 a ton. Oats were down 3½ cents and corn nearly 3. Iced broiler prices were fractionally mixed at the final bell after holding a gain of more than ½ cent a pound earlier in the session.

The selling of soybean futures followed a mixed opening and was set off largely by a quick downturn in soy oil prices. Commission house brokers began selling oil when stop-loss levels had been touched and prices quickly declined. Meal followed.

A factor in the weakness of the complex was a lack of sustained demand. Some selling also was influenced by an Agriculture Department statement that 10 percent more acreage could be devoted to soybeans in 1977 than the near-50 million acres this year. The estimate for corn was lower than 1976 but wheat acreage was expected to be the same.

Corn and oats followed an early demand in both pits that raised prices about 1½ cents. When the demand eased mixed selling sent prices lower.

The independent strength in the wheat pit was attributed to a light commercial demand set off by an exporter. Sellers were very thin and the pace of trade slow.

At the close, soybeans were 15 to 23½ cents a bushel lower, November 6.29; wheat was 5 to 6 higher, December 2.62; corn was ½ to 2¾ lower, December 2.32 and oats were 2⅜ to 3½ lower, December 1.49½.

Retail Food Prices Seen Up 3 to …

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15 (UPI)—Agriculture Department analysts predicted today that retail food prices would rise only 3 to 4 percent in 1977 and might for the second consecutive year act as a brake on increases in the overall cost of living.

Analysts reporting at the opening of the department's annual Agricultural Outlook Conference said their tentative forecast of 1977 retail food prices was for little change from the 3 percent increase currently predicted for this year—far below the 8.5 percent rise in 1975 and the 14.5 percent gains in each of the preceding two years.

James Donald, an economist, noting this year's rise was the smallest since 1971, attributed the continuing slowdown in food inflation to heavy supplies. The 3 percent 1976 increase, he said, meant that food prices were rising at only half the overall cost of living gain and therefore "are slowing the increase in the overall cost of living."

Percentage Decline Seen

Other analysts said that although total consumer food spending would be up 6 to 7 percent this year, the percentage of overall consumer income spent on food is expected to decline slightly from last year's 17.1 per cent. Best way out of town?

Philadelphia. One way.

A beautiful blonde once drove me to Philadelphia. She also drove me to drink.

(They're the only two things I have to thank her for.)

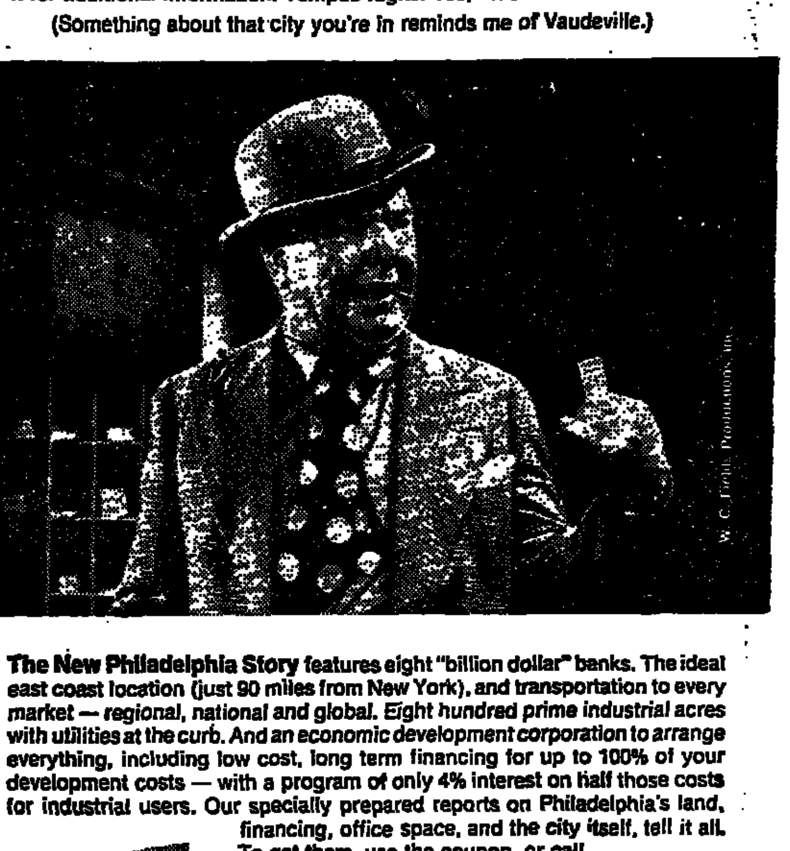
I suggest, however, you postpone the delights to be gained from blonde or bottle, and board the next rail car to sanctity and sanity on the Delaware.

Ah, yes: Philadelphia. The firm promise of business as usual and more of the same. A pleasurable paucity of insatiable tax mongers. An abundance of fully improved industrial land nearby and millions of square feet of office space within. Both available at reasonable rates.

(That's a diplomatic way of saying cheap money, my friend.)

Follow, then. Follow by canoe, by ox cart or on foot if not by train. Follow with blonde, if you insist. Follow your nose to the coupon below and forward it for additional information. Tempus fugits. Yes, indeed.

(Something about that city you're in reminds me of Vaudeville.)



The New Philadelphia Story features eight "billion dollar" banks. The ideal east coast location (just 90 miles from New York), and transportation to every market — regional, national and global. Eight hundred prime industrial acres with utilities at the curb. And an economic development corporation to arrange everything, including low cost, long term financing for up to 100% of your development costs — with a program of only 4% interest on half those costs for industrial users. Our specially prepared reports on Philadelphia's land, financing, office space, and the city itself, tell it all. To get them, use the coupon, or call.

The New Philadelphia Story Suite 1705,

Chemical Bank has the largest bank-run payroll management system in New York. We're proud of being number one, and we intend staying number one.

We'll even file and pay your payroll taxes.

When Chemical manages your payroll, we'll prepare, file and pay all your statutory payroll taxes anywhere in the U.S.

That's a standard feature of the Chemical system. A feature that outside data processing services simply do not offer.

We believe we can also do a more efficient job for your company than any outside payroll service.

You'll find we're faster. More flexible. More responsive to your needs. Which figures, because a major bank should know more about handling and transferring money than anyone else.

We're pretty proud of the fact that 39 other banks selected us to manage their own payrolls.

We think it says a lot about our system.

So if you're looking for a bank to manage your payroll, and your payroll taxes, call Ken LaMotte at (212) 952-2711.

Exxon U.S.A. Assigned Contracts For Two 165,000-Ton Oil Tankers

The Exxon Company U.S.A., a unit of the Exxon Corporation, said yesterday that it had taken assignment of contracts for the construction of two 165,000-ton tankers by a unit of the Ogden Corporation as part of an expansion of its tanker fleet. The expansion is designed to handle increased oil shipments from Alaska.

The two tankers were the final units of a six-tanker construction project that Ogden's Avondale shipyards and the Standard Oil Company (Ohio) agreed to in December 1974 at a total cost of about $400 million. Exxon said it expected to pay more than $65 million for each of the tankers. They are scheduled to be delivered from the Ogden unit's shipyards in Avondale, La., in late 1978.

Exxon also announced that it was in the process of chartering eight United States-flag tankers to raise its near-term capacity for transporting Alaskan oil to the East and Gulf coasts. The company said that these vessels were being leased from several owners and ranged in size from 38,000 tons to 115,000 tons.

Capital and exploration expenditures by the Exxon Corporation during the next four years are expected to total about $20 billion, Howard Kauffman, president, told a meeting of representatives of institutions having large Exxon shareholdings. He said that about 60 percent of this amount would go toward discovery and development of new energy resources and that about $2 billion would be spent on chemicals development.

Lockheed Unit Receives A Funding Contract

The Lockheed-Georgia Company, a unit of the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation, said it had received a long-lead funding contract for four advance model HC-130H Hercules patrol aircraft to be operated by the United States Coast Guard in enforcing this country's new 200-mile fisheries zone.

The long-lead funding amounts to $8 million, while the total contract for the planes is expected to exceed $25 million. The long-lead funding covers materials, planning and special engineering work necessary to start production.

Enforcement of the new fisheries zone is scheduled to start next March 1. The new patrol aircraft are scheduled for delivery in the latter part of next year.

Questionable Payments Made by Carter-Wallace

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15 — Carter-Wallace Inc., a New York toiletries and drug company, has made questionable payments to foreign government officials of about $610,000 since 1973, according to a filing made available today by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Of the total, $470,000 was to obtain about $7 million worth of business and the other $140,000 was to expedite action that might otherwise have been refused or delayed.

The company said the payments were made with cash generated by invoices for supplies not actually delivered and services not actually performed.

In addition, "small holiday-related gifts" were made to government clerks overseas and advertisements were run in medical journals owned by government doctors. One doctor also received a case of Scotch, the company said.

Du Pont Declares Dividend Of $1.75 for the Year-End

Directors of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company declared a year-end dividend of $1.75 a share of common stock. The dividend, payable Dec. 14 to holders of record Nov. 23, includes the normal $1.25 a share quarterly dividend and an extra dividend of 50 cents a share.

This will bring total dividents to $5.75 for this year, $1 higher than in 1975.

Irving S. Shapiro, Du Pont's chairman, said that the year-end extra dividend reflected the high level of earnings in 1976, which have resulted principally from the performance of the company's chemicals, plastics and specialty products divisions.

Kodak Introducing High Output Computer

The Eastman Kodak Company announced introduction of a new computer output microfilmer providing users with a high production capacity and extra flexibility to handle a great variety of microimage requirements.

The company said that the new microfilmer is designed for high and medium-volume users requiring fast turnaround such as banks, insurance companies, manufacturers and government agencies.

Computer output microfilming puts computer-generated reports and records directly on microfilm instead of on paper.

Dow Korea Receives Loan

Dow Chemical Korea Ltd. and the Korea Pacific Chemical Corporation have been granted loans by an international banking consortium, the European Banking Company, Ltd. a co-leader manager of the group, announced in London. The two companies are among participants in a major petrochemical development in South Korea for which investments have been estimated at between $800 million and $1 billion.

Pillsbury Units Growing

The Pillsbury Company expects to open about 260 Burger King Restaurants in its fiscal year ending next May 31, Arthur A. Rosewall, the company's executive vice president for restaurants, said in a presentation to security analysts in Boston. This will be substantially higher than the 225 units the company had earlier expected to open during the fiscal year, he said, and by the end of the period the total of Burger King restaurants in operation will exceed 1,860.

ICL wouldn't be foolish enough to compete with IBM unless we could offer more.

Getting a computer system operating smoothly can be a difficult, drawn out, costly process. That's because you normally don't get much from the computer company besides the computer.

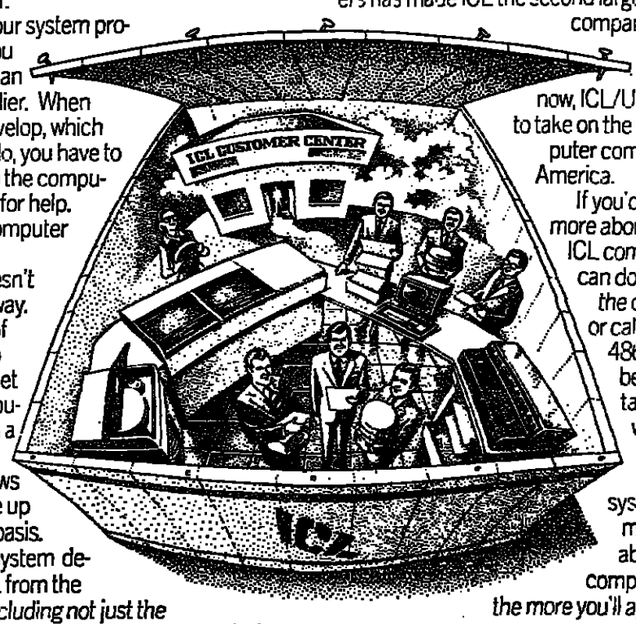
To get your system programmed, you have to go to an outside supplier. When problems develop, which they always do, you have to go running to the computer company for help. While your computer sits helpless.

ICL doesn't operate this way.

Instead of forcing you to acquire and set up your computer system on a piecemeal basis, ICL allows you to set one up on a rational basis. A complete system designed by ICL from the ground up. Including not just the computer, but the application, systems design, programming, installation, and all the tinkering it takes to get a system working correctly after installation.

What's more, ICL can custom design a computer to fit your needs. One which can be added to modularly, as your business grows. Eliminating costly changeovers to new systems in mid-stream.

Our engineers maintain your system on a regular basis to keep it on line. In addition, ICL maintains a customer center which can handle your workload if your system is out of action for any reason. ICL does all this because we know the service you get from your computer system is only as good as what you get from your computer company. This approach to computers has made ICL the second largest computer company outside the United States. And now, ICL/U.S.A. is ready to take on the largest computer companies in America.



If you'd like to learn more about what an ICL computer system can do for you, mail the coupon below or call us at (212) 486-7412. But before you do, talk to anyone who's ever bought a computer system. The more you know about ordinary computer systems, the more you'll appreciate ICL.

New Wrinkle in Coupon Merchandising

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

Manufacturers' use of cents-off coupons, which grew 19.8 percent last year over 1974, are expected to increase 15 to 20 percent this year, according to the A. C. Nielsen Clearing House.

Altogether, there were 35.7 billion coupons distributed through various media last year. About 2 billion of them were redeemed. And it's their redemption rate and cost per thousand for distribution that are of paramount importance to marketers making decisions on how to get their coupons into the hands of consumers.

The common methods are through newspaper ads, newspaper Sunday supplements and free-standing inserts; magazines, direct mail and in-pack or on pack.

Enter Dion P. Hallahan, who after 15 years in the direct response field, has, with two partners, set up Boxboard Advertising in Hauppauge, L.I. His idea, a variation of the in-pack coupon, is to print coupons on the inside of produce packaging. Tha could be boxes, can labels, even plastic bags.

He will be offering a low cost ($2.50 per thousand) in a distribution method that generally has higher-than-average redemption rates.

According to Nielsen, in and on-pack coupons have a 17 percent redemption rate that is topped only by direct mail (11.7 percent) and pop-up inserts in magazines (9.1 percent).

However, in-pack coupons for products other than that contained in the pack (this is called cross-couponing) have a redemption rate of 7.1 percent, which is still better than newspapers (all forms) and on-page coupons in magazines.

The first carrier for Boxboard will be Red Rose Tea with some 500,000 boxes, each carrying 12 coupons, printed all over the inside of the box, being distributed throughout the Northeast. The coupons are for products and two for direct marketers.

On the top of each of the boxes—where the shopper can see them—is the tag "Save $1.57. Coupons inside" followed by a list of the products represented. This will be promoted in the stores and, it is hoped, by the trade.

Participants include Colgate-Palmolive for two products; TV Guide with a subscription offer, and Lea & Perrins sauce.

The cost of inclusion in the program will also cover media advertising for the promotion. Mr. Hallahan said he will definately be using television in May in the New York, Philadelphia and Boston markets, but first he's going to test market the whole thing in Albany using radio advertising. His agency is Mad Ave. East in Melville, L.I.

For the manufacturer whose packaging serves as a medium there will be a double benefit. Not only is his product's sales enhanced by the coupon offer on the box, but Mr. Hallahan says, he also plans to divide his spoils with manufacturers.

He also said—and this is a little hard to believe—that Boxboard would be distributing between 300 million and 500 million coupons next year.

Keeping Bells Ringing

Ma Bell (the American Telephone and Telegraph Company) and all of her little bells (the companies in the Bell System) are beginning to learn some of the facts of competitive life. Now that clients can hook up other manufacturers equipment to Bell lines, Ma and the little ones are adopting a more hard-sell approach.

Just such an approach was taken by Riedl Associates, a Clifton, N. J., agency that New Jersey Bell retained to do a multimedia presentation designed to sell and keep industries in the state as total Bell customers.

Created around the theme of accountability ("the commitment to deliver service even in the fact of disaster") the presentation is being shown in the Executive Communications Center of the Western Electric building in Newark to corporate executives from throughout the state.

Bozell & Jacobs, Newark, is New Jersey Bell's regular ad agency. But only Riedl carries the trademark "the synergistic agency." And you know what that means.

Helitzer Is Chosen For Hot Items Toys

Now here's a hot item: Helitzer Advertising, specialists in advertising to the young, has become the agency for Hot Items Inc., a toy company with headquarters in Newark. Helitzer said its new client would be spending a record $1 million in TV this spring. The previous agency was Robert S. Block in Milwaukee.

The products involved—and five 30-second commercials have been prepared for each—are Crazy Super Soapers, Press 'n Blow Bubbles and Aero-Copter.

Elsewhere in agencyland, Grey Advertising announced that it had become the agency for the BVD Company, a division of Union Underwear. Union was already a Grey client.

Free but Competitive

When Ogilvy & Mather International announced its plans to acquire Scali, McCabe,* Sloves, leaving it not only almost independent but also competitive, there were many folk who believed the move to be a breakthrough in creative management thinking. Actually, O.&M.'s British company, Ogilvy, Benson & Mather in similar fashion acquired Davidson Pearce Berry & Spottiswoode and the two do compete. It was indeed the model for the Scali deal, O.&M. says.

Diffusive Essence

Essence, the magazine for black women, that is up 40 percent in ad pages this year, is increasing its circulation rate base to 550,000 from 500,000 in January. It has also established a fashion and beauty marketing department designed to help advertisers with sales promotion and in-store promotion and teach them about this special market.

CHC Rebuffs McCall

The principal stockholders and officers of the CHC Corporation, a publishing company, yesterday turned down a revised offer from the McCall Publishing Company to acquire a majority interest in CHC.

Petersen's Comeback

Petersen Publishing was in a good position to get hurt by the cutback in automotive advertising last year, and was. However, as for many, 1976 is a come-back year. Ad pages were up 22 percent to 5,274 and revenues up 23 percent to $24.2 million for the fiscal year ending this month.

The magazines, almost entirely devoted to coverage of the leisure field, include Hot Rod, Car Craft and Motor Trend, so-called buff books. But car and aftermarket advertisers also traditionally have used Skin Diver, Guns & Ammo and Hunting as well. So they got hurt, too.

It's Now Newsmedia

Shoppers Voice Inc. has changed its name to Newmedia Marketing Companies and is dedicating itself, in the words of Tom F. Hill, its chairman, to finding "new uses, forms and structures of existing media and how to improve them as communications for advertising and marketing." Oh, that again.

Dentsu Promotes Spain

The Dentsu Corporation of America, the United States arm of the Japanese advertising agency, has just started its second $2 million campaign for the Spanish Tourist Office. The theme is "Come to the real Spain" and advertising will run in over 35 newspapers here and in Canada; a minimum of 16 national magazines, and on radio in New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia and the Baltimore/Washington market.

Taxes: Free Tuition for Children Of Faculty Challenged by I.R.S.

through, it will be a major problem to face this now."

Mr. Kallenberger questioned why the I.R.S. should press the issue of tuition remission without also pursuing such practices as free air travel for airline employees or free use of demonstrator cars by aut salesmen. But the schools' tax strategists want no part of that argument.

"This is a different issue," Mrs. Lowder maintained. "Tuition remission is indeed a scholarship. It is not a fringe benefit. It goes to the child, not the parent."

In one form or another, tuition remission has become the norm at most private universities and some public institutions. College administrators defend the benefit as unusually important to faculty members, who traditionally have relatively low pay coupled with high expectations for their children's education.

"It's a very important element in recruiting," said Allen Claxton, vice president for finance at New York University. Though some institutions limit the benefit to faculty and professional staff, any N.Y.U. employee or his dependents are eligible. Mr. Claxton continued. He estimated that 1,000 employee dependents were currently benefiting. The remission applies only to tuition—excluding fees or expenses—which is almost $3,500 a year for a full-time undergraduate.

Some groups of institutions have agreed to reciprocal practices to widen the choice of schools for faculty children. According to a spokesman for Columbia University, "If a Columbia professor's child goes to Princeton, Columbia pays his tuition," and vice versa. At Columbia, where undergraduate tuition is $3,990 a year, 1,000 faculty or staff dependents are enjoying free tuition, the spokesman estimated.

Not all private universities remit tuition. R. Jerrold Gibson, director of fiscal services at Harvard University, said the most it offered was interest-free loans to faculty members for their children's education. Even that smaller benefit — the interest forgiven — has come under I.R.S. scrutiny as a possibly taxable item. "They're among the toughest in the nation," Mr. Gibson said of the I.R.S. Boston district.

Factors in Paying Taxes While Abroad

The 1976 Tax Reform Act's well-publicized tax increases on Americans working abroad may have a less obvious effect — encouraging a rational form of robbing employee Peter to pay employee Paul.

According to Booz, Allen & Hamilton Inc., management consultants, numerous American companies already pay special allowances to employees assigned to countries with higher taxes than at home. But only a handful of "very sophisticated" companies has paid much attention to the bargain enjoyed by employees stationed where taxes are low, Booz, Allen says.

Frederick A. Teague of Booz, Allen predicts that more companies will take those tax savings explicitly into account when setting pay for foreign posts. That is one way to offset the higher cost of their existing policy of protecting employees in high-tax lands —as much as 30 percent higher than before the Reform Act, he says.

But saving money is only one factor, the compensation specialist adds. Not surprisingly, companies have found their overseas employees take root in low-tax areas and resist transfers. The solution, Mr. Teague suggests, is to make taxes irrelevant by working out a defensible system of adjustments—positive or negative—that keeps all employees on par with taxes in the United States.

"The rest of that story is on the back of the coffee coupon."

And that's good news for food advertisers. Because more than 1,200,000 daily readers make quite a crowd at the supermarket.

It's a fact that The Globe reaches 78% of the Boston newspaper readers with children in the family.

Announcing TIME EuroExecutive.

The publishers of TIME announce the first demographic advertising edition ever published in Europe...TIME EuroExecutive...centered precisely on the Executive Market of Europe.

The edition has a circulation of 85,000 and a black and white page rate of $3,570.

These 85,000 were chosen from TIME Europe subscribers who, by questionnaire, individually identified themselves as executives in business, government or the professions.

The basic page rate of $3,570 brings TIME EuroExecutive within range of those limited-budget advertisers who have long sought a way to reach...economically...a major segment of the European Executive Market in a high-prestige setting.

TIME EuroExecutive becomes available with the issue of February 7, 1977. Matching pages in TIME Top Management in the U.S. will earn a 5% discount for both. For further details call your TIME representative, or International Area Director Dave Gibson in New York at 212 556-4452.

How you look on TV depends a lot on how other advertisers look.

What comes before and after your commercial is an important consideration in spot television buying these days. Unfortunately, the commercials on either side of yours can adversely affect how people react to your commercial.

That's why newspapers like The Houston Chronicle are looking better all the time.

The Chronicle has a one-time reach of 593,000 adult readers. And you reach them in an atmosphere that's conducive to selling.

For more information, contact our national representative, Sawyer, Ferguson, Walker.

He has served as ...ve vice president, chief financial officer and a member of the board, among other positions, since joining the company in 1972. In his new post, he succeeds W. Michael Blumenthal, who continues as chairman and chief executive officer.

After earning a master's degree in business administration from Harvard University, Mr. Agee joined the Boise Cascade Corporation in 1967. He became senior vice president and chief financial officer of the company after rising through the ranks.

He joined Bendix in June 1972 as executive vice president and chief financial officer, and in December of the same year became a member of the office of the chief executive.

Mr. Blumenthal, who announced Mr. Agee's election, also announced the resignation of William L. Miron as executive vice president and a member of the board. Mr. Miron, who said he intends to pursue other interests, joined Bendix in 1961 and served in his present post since 1970.

Prime Minister James Callaghan gave notice last night that his Labor Party Government was relying on private enterprise to pull Britain out of its economic mess. To this end, he said, capitalism will get "absolute" priority over the traditional objectives of Socialism.

The Prime Minister was speaking at the annual banquet at the Guildhall to mark the inauguration of Robin Gillett as Lord Mayor of London for a year. The assembled guests represented some of the most prominent figures in bankingg, finance and business.

Mr .Callaghan has already rejected the pleas of the leftwing members of his party to cure britain's ills by Socialist measures.

"We must adhere to the industrial strategy that has been worked out and agreed by both th Trades Union Congress and the Confederation of British Industry which aims at giving absolute priority to industrial neds, ahead of even our social objectives," he declared.

"We must insure that industry is profitable and industry must respond by invesing, modernizing and finding and exploiting export markets."

Various financial institutions have been proposed over the last three years to recycle petrodollars, and yesterday a high official of the National Iranian Oil Company proposed an "energy bank" that would accept deposits denominated in both units of currency and energy.

William M. Agee
The new president and chief operating officer at Bendix.

Speaking at a joint meeting of the Atomic Industrial Forum and the American Nuclear Society in Washington, Reza Fellah, deputy chairman of the company, argued that the proposal "would reduce the incentive of producing countries to raise oil prices since they would have the option at maturity to claim payment in energy units."

Richard W. Wood, chairman and chief executive officer of Eli Lilly & Company, has been elected to the additional post of president. He succeeds Thomas H. Lake, president, who will retire Dec. 31 but will continue as vice chairman and a member of the board. A. Malcolm McVie has been elected executive vice president of Eli Lilly and will continue as president of the Elanco Products Company, a division.

Shell and Exxon Deadline Runs Out For Oil Agreement With Malaysia

Special to The New York Times

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia, Tuesday, Nov. 16—A deadline ran out at midnight on attempts by the Malaysian Government to reach production sharing agreements with Shell and Exxon oil companies and, despite last-minute talks, the two sides failed to announce a compromise.

Yesterday, without referring to the deadline, Prime Minister Datuk Hussein Onn told the Malaysian Parliament that "some progress" had been made but "there are still problems to be surmounted." He added that if no final agreement was reached with Shell and Exxon, other oil companies would be invited to take their place.

His remarks were interpreted here as holding out the possibility of a post-deadline agreement in principle. The parties involved refused to comment publicly, but the Prime Minister was expected to make a further statement on the negotiations later today.

Accord Is Single Document

The November deadline was set by the Malaysian Prime Minister at the end of July to break a deadlock that had settled on the negotiations. At that time, he hinted at the possibility of nationalization if no pact was signed. But since then, observers believe he has backed away from that position and has been putting behind-the-scenes pressure on Malaysian officials to work out a realistic compromise. The president of Esso Eastern Incorporated, Morey D.J. Oloughlin, flew here from Houston last Friday, raising hopes that an eleventh-hour agreement might still be reached. According to an Exxon spokesman, Mr. Oloughlin has been actively involved in the negotiations both in Houston and since his arrival here, and he described the final stage of the talks as "very cordial and businesslike".

The draft agreement, which Government officials say is a single document although Shell and Exxon have been negotiating independently, runs to over 50 pages and covers all aspects of the companies' upstream operations in Malaysia, including the number of years they will be permitted to work here and formulate for cost recovery and profit-sharing with the Government if signed. The agreement would be retroactive to April 1, 1975.

FOREIGNERS IN U.S. SELL $3.2 BILLION IN SECURITIES

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Foreigners attracted by declining interest rates sold a record $3.2 billion in securities, bonds and other new financial issues in the United States during the third quarter, the Commerce Department said Monday.

The department said the unprecedented volume of new issues accounted for a $2.8 billion net gain in United States purchases of foreign securities, double the increase in the second quarter.

The Philippines and Canadian provinces were the largest of the new investment vehicles offered in the quarter.

The data was contained in a summary that formerly was used to deal with the balance of payments. The department discontinued the payments report on grounds that most of the data was no longer meaningful.

... also said foreign official assets in the United States increased $1.2 billion, ... from a $3.2 billion increase in the second quarter. The department attrib... the decline to reduced United States ... members of the Organiza... ... Exporting Countries ... of non-...

Cold front: a boundary between cold air and warmer air, under which the colder air pushes like a wedge, usually south and east.

Warm front: a boundary between warm air and a retreating wedge of colder air over which the warm air is forced as it advances, usually north and east.

Occluded front: a line along which warm air was lifted by opposing wedges of cold air, often causing precipitation.

Shaded areas indicate precipitation.

Dash lines show forecast afternoon maximum temperatures.

Isobars are lines (solid black) of equal barometric pressure (in inches), forming air-flow patterns.

Winds are counterclockwise toward the center of low-pressure systems, clockwise outward from high-pressure areas. Pressure systems usually move east.

CBS's Paley in Soviet To Bid for Olympics

William S. Paley, chairman of CBS Inc., and Robert J. Wussler, president of CBS-TV, arrived in Moscow yesterday to negotiate the United States television rights to the 1980 summer Olympic Games to be held in the Soviet capital, a CBS spokesman said last night.

The other major American networks, ABC and NBC, also are reported to be bidding for the rights, which have been held for many years by ABC. ABC, which paid $25 million to televise last summer's Olympics in Montreal, already has won the rights for the 1980 Winter Olympics to be held at Lake Placid, N.Y. Its bid was reported to be more than $15 million.

What are described as preliminary negotiations are under way in Moscow for the 1980 summer games. Broadcasting circles in New York have suggested that a bid of $70 million to $100 million may be necessary to obtain the rigths.

"Civilisation" Tonight: Chapter 4.

"Man–The Measure of All Things."

Modern man's image of himself is created by the artists of the Italian Renaissance.

Visiting the art treasures of Florence and the palaces of Ferrara, Mantua and Urbino, historian Kenneth Clark shows how, in the 15th century, man suddenly became the center of the universe.

BOUZA IS CLEARED IN POLICE INCIDENT

No Reason for Disciplinary Action Found in Episode at Stadium—P.B.A. Contract Session Set

Police Commissioner Michael J. Codd disclosed yesterday that a departmental investigation of former Assistant Chief Anthony V. Bouza had cleared him of charges of mishandling demonstrations by off-duty police officers. The demonstrations occurred during the Muhammad Ali-Ken Norton heavyweight championship fight in September at Yankee Stadium and were accompanied by vandalism by youths.

"The investigation of that entire episode has now been concluded," Commissioner Codd said in an interview in his 14th-floor office at Police Headquarters. "We have not found any reason for the initiation of disciplinary action in this case."

Chief Bouza, who retired from the Police Department last week and is now deputy chief of the New York City Transit Authority police, expressed satisfaction at the termination and the findings of Commissioner Codd's investigation.

'I Felt I Did My Duty'

"I am very glad to be cleared," he said in a telephone interview last evening. "I felt I did my duty properly, and I never felt that the investigation was a cloud."

Commissioner Codd said, however, that although the high-echelon police officials at the scene of the demonstrations—which were held by off-duty policemen as part of their continuing labor dispute with the city—had been cleared of misconduct charges, new refresher courses would be held for them to review techniques of crowd control and other matters.

The Commissioner yesterday also emphasized once again that the Police Department was seeking the assistance of the city's auxiliary police in combating crime against the elderly. The department's position is being challenged by the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association, which has criticized the auxiliary police as, in the words of Douglas D. Weaving, the P.B.A. president, "scabbers."

Negotiations to Resume

Meanwhile, the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association made plans for a resumption of negotiations tomorrow with city officials in a new effort to resolve their contract dispute. The newly appointed bargaining committee of 50 delegates met for another briefing session yesterday, reviewed cost figures and made suggestions for possible new approaches to the negotiations.

Members of the P.B.A. committee are scheduled to confer again at 10 A.M. tomorrow and then meet at 2 P.M. with city negotiators at 250 Broadway.

Both P.B.A. and city spokesmen said yesterday that they would like to settle the dispute through direct negotiations rather than turning to an impasse panel under the city's collective bargaining law. Another failure to resolve their differences, however, could lead eventually to use of the impasse procedure. But at present neither side showed interest in utilizing it.

Schuler Urges Increase Of 12% in Transit Subsidy For the New York Area

By EDWARD C. BURKS

State Transportation Commissioner Raymond T. Schuler proposed yesterday a 12 percent increase in the level of annual state and local subsidies for New York City's transit operations.

Under his recommended subsidy program of $239.3 million for the fiscal year 1977-78 — to be shared equally by the state and local governments — operating aid could be increased under the following incentive plan:

¶For the Transit Authority's subway and bus operations, a maximum of $157 million, compared with $140 million in the current fiscal year, 1976-77.

¶For the Metropolitan Transportation Authority's Long Island Rail Road, and Harlem, Hudson and New Haven commuter line operations, an estimated $51.6 million, compared with $40 million this fiscal year.

In an annual report—required by law—on the state's permanent Operating Assistance Program for Public Transportation, Mr. Schuler proposed a $30.6 million increase in the annual state and local subsidies, including $14.6 million as an incentive for promoting and expanding service.

Distribution Formula Questioned

Commenting on the relatively modest increase in state-local aid under his program, Mr. Schuler said that the real need was for more Federal operating aid based on a more equitable distribution formula. He was sharply critical of the present Federal distribution formula, contending that it encouraged the development of new transit services where they were not needed and shortchanged such areas as New York City, which were heavily dependent on mass transit.

The report, submitted annually to the Governor and the State Legislature, includes various proposals for changing the Federal aid formula. The changes would give New York City's transit operations at least 57 percent more per year.

The report does not suggest a regional transportation tax—recommended by the M.T.A.—as a means of raising operating money. A Schuler aide said that such a tax proposal probably "would not fly in the Legislature."

Under the present Federal aid formula, based both on total population and population density, the New York City area (exclusive of New Jersey) receives 14 percent of the total allocation of Federal Section 5" funds for operating purposes —about $78.1 million for transit and $22.7 million for commuter rails. But the city alone has 37 percent of the nation's transit revenue riders and 28 percent of the "vehicle miles" covered.

In urging a new formula, Mr. Schuler asked for greater emphasis on ridership, or at least shifting it to population density, which would give the city area 22 percent of the total.

Car Insurance Rates Found Burdening Some Groups; Faulty Data Suggested as Fac

already under way in New Jersey; and at least two states, North Carolina and Hawaii, have passed laws prohibiting the use of age and sex as criteria for the cost of auto premiums. In New York, Superintendent of Insurance Thomas A. Harnett recently directed his chief actuary to begin a study of the industry's risk-assessment system.

Two broker groups in New York believe that the system unfairly burdens people in the assigned-risk pool, and they are planning to protest the proposed increase.

Murray Berns, a broker and a member of the board of the New York Automobile Insurance Plan, the official name of the pool, said in a recent interview, "When the pool gets as large as it is, you have to ask whether maybe the people in it are subsidizing the rest of the population, rather than the other way around."

Mr. Berns, who is also a member of the Metropolitan Insurance Brokers Association, believes that by the end of the year almost one out of five drivers in the state will be insured through the pool, which charges higher rates than individual companies, in most cases.

The State Insurance Department estimated the number of drivers in the pool at one in 10.

The Federal Insurance Administrator, J. Robert Hunter, who was on the task force that conducted the Insurance Commissioners' study, said recently that there was "no credible statistical evidence" for the 161 classification slots used by most of the insurance industry. These slots include age, sex, marital status, type of car and amount of driving, among a host of other information that the industry believes can be used to predict the likelihood of accidents.

Histories Advocated

Mr. Hunter said that he advocated the use of driving histories—covering accidents and traffic infractions—as the primary determinants for deciding how much a driver should pay for insurance, and that he favored the elimination of assigned-risk pools altogether. To replace them, he believes, the states should pass so-called full-insurance-availability laws, which would require insurance companies to provide coverage to anyone who requested it.

Mr. Hunter's position is vigorously contested by spokesmen for industry trade groups like the American Mutual Insurance Alliance who cite a May 1976 study by the Stanford Research Institute. The study, which was financed by the trade groups, concluded that governmental interference in the risk-assessment process would lead to, among other things, "market dislocations" and "subsidies among consumers."

To the clients of William Vargas, an insurance broker in the South Bronx, the territory in the state with the highest rates, discussions of such problems are irrelevant. They are concerned only with an insurance bill that they cannot afford to pay.

Example Is Cited

From his files, Mr. Vargas pulled out the folder on one family whose policy would lapse soon because it had fallen behind on its premium payments. The policy covered a 54-year-old woman and her 21-year-old married son, neither of whom had any history of accidents or violations. They owned two cars, a 1969 Chevrolet and a 1968 Buick, but the policy did not include coverage for fire and theft or collision.

All it included was the minimum liability coverage required by New York State law. The price tag: $825 a year.

Had the family lived in Suffolk County and the son been 30 instead of 21, the same policy would have cost $240.

Mr. Vargas, who is on the board of the Latin and American Brokers Association, and Mr. Berns believe that people like the ones in this family will either drive without insurance or obtain it under false pretenses.

"I had a situation where a 5-foot 1-inch girl came in to buy insurance on a Honda 750 motorcycle," Mr. Berns said. "She couldn't possibly lift the bike up or kick the starter over. I told her to bring her boyfriend in to get the insurance himself."

Insurance is automatically expensive for residents of inner city areas because it is almost certain that will have to get coverage in the assigned-risk pool regardless of their driving records or other characteristics, according to Mr. Vargas. Although it is now difficult for any person in New York State to find a company willing to insure him if he is a new driver or just wants to switch companies, this situation has exissted in such areas for many years.

In fact, what some critics consider one of the most damaging arguments against assigned-risk pools is that the majority of the people in the pools—70 percent in New York, according to the insurance department—have no history of accidents or traffic violations.

Richard Decker, the manager of the Automobile Insurance Plan Services Office, the industry organization that administers the pool, readily acknowledges that the companies use subjective criteria, such as the length of time at the same address or in the same job, the type of occupation and evidence of financial stability—in deciding to whom they will not voluntarily sell insurance. But he asserts that the wisdom of these judgments is confirmed by the fact that the drivers in the pool with no history of accidents or violations end up having so many accidents that the pool loses money on them.

Appeal System Sought

Mr. Hunter, one of the foremost critics of the pools, insists there is a flaw in Mr. Decker's argument. He said that some of the people whose applications to the pool listed no history of accidents or violations were subsequently found by the insurance companies to have had bad records. The companies get this information routinely from state motor-vehicle departments. For this reason, Mr. Hunter argues, Mr. Decker's statistics are faulty and cannot be used to justify placing drivers with truly perfect records in the pool.

Asked about this, Mr. Decker said that the statistics came from a multitude of companies and that he did not know how many of them corrected their records when they discovered accidents or violations in the background of a supposedly "clean" driver.

The other major reason for the high premiums paid by clients of brokers like Mr. Vargas is that they live in territories with high accident ratings.

The Stanford Research Institute study, however, recognizes that the industry has no precise way of identifying which people living in a given territory—or which 21-year-old driver, for that matter—will have an accident.

Thus, those people in highly rated groups and territories end up subsidizing the people within their group who do have accidents.

The study does not see that a more "practical" method exists, but recommends the establishment of an appeals system through which a driver could protest his classification.

The Stanford study also recognized that the whole statistical basis underlying the industry's classification system might be radically changed by conversion to nofault auto insurance. Under a pure no-fault system, a driver would not be able to sue another over an accident, but would simply recover his medical expenses, lost wages and other damages from his own company.

Under such a system, the low-income driver, whose lost wages would be small and who might get relatively cheap medical care, might cost his insurance company much less than a middle- or upper-income driver. Thus, even if the poor inner-city dweller was involved in more accidents than his wealthier suburban counterpart, it could cost less to insure him.

New York does not have a pure no-fault system: Suits are allowed when medical expenses rise above $500. But indications are that middle- and upper-income drivers are suing more often than lower-income drivers, and, therefore, that it may be costing more to insure them.

In testimony to the New Jersey Insurance Department recently, the Insurance Service Office, the national rating organization that does statistical work for the insurance industry, said that it was beginning to re-evaluate its statistical classifications in light of no-fault experience. But the process has not been completed.

The increase in assigned-risk rates proposed for New York by the Automobile Insurance Plans Services Office, Mr. Decker acknowledged, is based on trends that predate New York's no-fault system. But he contended that data were insufficient upon which to base "a major shift in the rates."

Additional Costs

It also appears that, in certain respects, so-called high-risk drivers are actually subsidizing the lower-risk drivers. Everyone's premium includes an amount of money meant to cover the broker's or agent's commission, the company's home-office expenses and a state tax. But these amounts are taken out as fixed percentages.

For example, of the $825 premium charged to Mr. Vargas's client, $82.50 (10 percent) was for commission, $90.75 (11 percent) for company home-office expenses and $33.00 (4 percent) for state tax, for a total of $206.25. If that family's premium had been $240, it would have paid only $60 for the agent's commission, home office expenses, like heating and lighting and taxes.

"Why should one driver pay so much more for the light falling on his policy than another driver?" Mr. Hunter asked.

Mr. Decker said that he saw "no theoretical reason" why these expenses could not be distributed differently and that, in fact, this was now done with "large commercial risks." He added, however, that adjusting the system might be expensive.

Those advocating reform of the classification system, like Mr. Hunter, believe a proper system would rate drivers primarily according to their accident records and history of violations and would use other data as secondary determinations.

North Carolina has adopted such a system by state law but a suit by the industry has delayed its implementation. According to Byron Tatum, deputy insurance commissioner there, the law eliminates all territorial and class distinctions except by use of car. Those who drive to work pay more than those who do not. However, people who acc "points" for violations like drivi intoxicated are surcharged.

"Under the old system," Mr. said," someone convicted of drun ing was paying less than a 16-y kid, and a drunk driver is the mo gerous person on the road."

The insurance industry has ma jections to such a change in the Among them, as the Stanford studi is that ignoring age and sex crit an attempt to distort reality by selectively blind."

Another argument advanced industry is that people whose pr are low would resent paying lower the premiums of residents like the South Bronx.

"Do the people in Ticonderoga, damn about the people in the Bronx?" Mr. Decker asked. "I don so."

Philipp K. Stern, the chief act the New Jersey Insurance Dep and one of the leading advocates form of the industry's risk-ass system, dismisses that argument.

"As far as the industry is co it's O.K. if people who live wi same territory subsidize each ot not O.K. if you subsidize someon 50 miles away," he said. "The of insurance is subsidy, the spre risk. The question is only how you spread it to balance the los city blocks, a county, a state or a country?"

The new system in North Caro arranged, according to official so that no driver with a "clean" would have to pay more than before the system was set up with bad driving records wo increases, the officials said, whe rate for a 21-year-old male who car for commuting and who "clean" record would decrease fr to $78 for basic coverage.

The suit challenging the syst tends that it would not yield revenue to cover the industry's

TAXI OWNERS SAY LEASING WOULDN'T INVOLVE LAYOFFS

The taxi industry in New York City told union negotiators yesterday that no licensed union driver would be laid off as a result of the proposed program for leasing individual taxis to drivers.

This assurance came as negotiators for the taxi fleets and Local 3036 of the Taxi Drivers Union sought to reach agreement on a new contract to replace the one expiring at midnight tonight.

In the talks to date the union has refused to go along with the leasing plan, which the fleet owners have contended would provide greater incentives for drivers and would insure profitability for the fleets.

The fleets, for their part, have resisted union demands for higher commissions, better pensions and improved benefits.

Vincent D. McDonnell, chairman of the State Mediation Board, said late yesterday that there had been no real progress in the taxi negotiations but that he had asked the two sides to resume their bargaining talks at his offices in the World Trade Center today. He said he was keeping the Mayor's office informed on the status of the negotiations.

The taxi union has not yet threatened strike action, but union leaders and stewards were reported to have met last night to review the situation. The union represents about 20,000 drivers of 3,800 fleet taxis.

The industry proposed the leasing arrangement as a possible solution to the marginal nature of many taxi-fleet operations. The fleets say that drivers now earn about $225 a week, but they contend that the drivers, if they worked hard six days a week, could earn as much as $275 or $300 under a leasing arrangement.

Industry sources said that their assurances of no job losses as a result of leasing would not apply to drivers who had worked less than one day a week in the last two quarters.

Menopause– the myth and the reality.

It is, for many women, a frightening time of life—an experience that is difficult to understand and in some cases impossible to talk about.

But what exactly happens to a woman physically, sexually and psychologically during menopause? Why is it that some women show almost no effects during this period while others are sometimes brought to the brink of suicide? And is there really a male equivalent to female menopause?

For the answers to these and many other questions about this misunderstood and often taboo subject, watch Part I of tonight's Survival Report in the news by Correspondent Ellen Fleysher and Health & Science Editor Charles Crawford.

No change in Washington.

An estimated 1,000 Presidential appointments will be made in the next 90 days or so. Yet, in the midst of all this change, a constant remains. The Wall Street Journal.

Election, '76.
Changes. At every level of government.
But in the midst of change, one constant remains.
Why? Because The Journal is the essential source of news and information. At every level of government. Administration after administration.

The need to know. The Journal's special role.

Every business day, The Journal provides intelligence critically important to decision-makers.
The Journal meets this need to know—and in a concise style that reflects an understanding of the demands upon a decision-maker's time.
But, above all, a decision-maker needs to know the truth. And, in this respect, The Journal's reputation for objective, let-the-chips-fall-where-they-may reporting makes this publication must reading, wherever the business of government takes place.

The Journal's constituency.

Of course, The Journal's audience is far more than Washington.
Beyond government, The Journal reaches a national audience of leaders.
For example, The Journal is the top reading choice of top and middle management executives in America's largest corporations, coast to coast.
More than a third more such executives read The Journal than read the next most read publication (as compared to Time, Newsweek, Business Week, Dun's Review, Forbes, Fortune, Nation's Business, U.S. News & World Report).

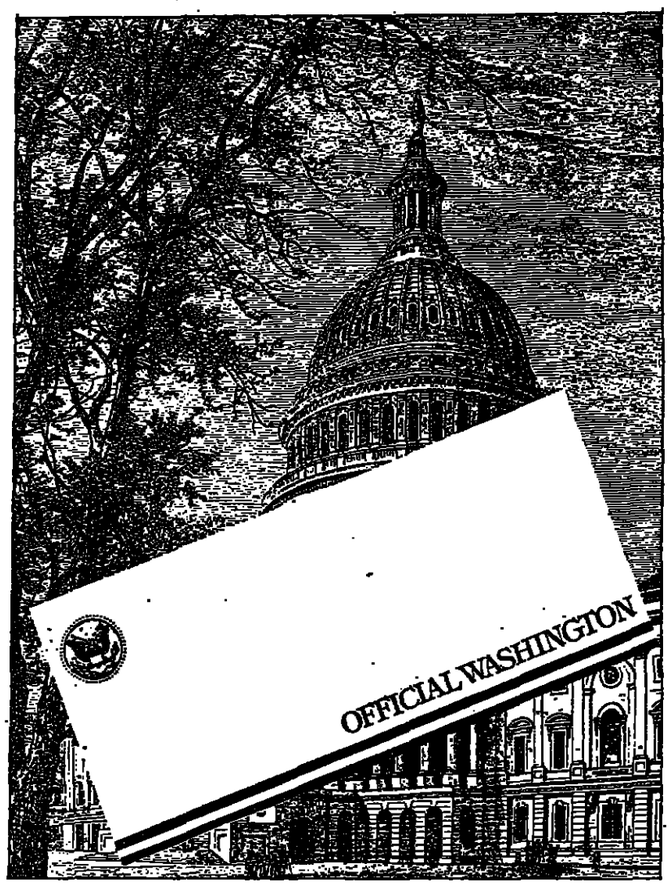
A platform that provides stature.

If you seek to reach and persuade American leadership, The Journal provides an incomparable platform.



Official Washington. The latest study of the U.S. Senate, the U.S. House of Representatives, and a sampling of officials in the major departments and independent agencies of the Executive Branch—as listed in the Congressional Directory—618 decision-makers in all, with influence over an estimated $400 billion per year in Federal spending. You can get your free copy from any Wall Street Journal advertising sales representative.

Over five million decision-making Americans read The Journal.
They trust The Journal.
They see The Journal as essential to their lives.
Their trust, their feeling of confidence, flow across the lines that separate Journal editorial matter and the advertising which appears in The Journal.
The result is intense readership. High responsiveness. Belief. And measurable results.

Washington, 1977.

Americans have elected a new Congress. And there'll be new faces in Washington.

But in 1977, as in years past, The Journal will be the essential source of news and information throughout government.
This is a safe prediction. For studies of Official Washington's reading choices have consistently shown that The Journal is the winning ticket. No other national print medium (or tv program, for th matter) reaches Official Washington so frequentl and so effectively.

Question:
Of the publications you read...which one do you consider most accurate and believable?

Answer:

The Wall Street Journal	54.2%
Business Week	14.6%
Forbes	3.2%
Fortune	7.1%
Nation's Business	1.1%
Newsweek	14.4%
The New York Times (daily)	27.7%
Time	13.8%
U.S. News & World Report	24.8%

Washington's winning ticket— and your winning ticket, too.

Reach today's leaders, tomorrow's leaders, with the publication written and edited to meet a leader's need to know.
It's the winning ticket—for advertisers who'd like to be the choice of the people's choice, in any year.

The Wall Street Journal. It works.
